NURSE SAYS WIFE FEARED EATON

SEIZE $10,000 IN JEWELS

CUSTOMS MEN FIND PEARLS

The startling disclosure was made today that Mrs. May Van Alen Thompson, the famous society bride, had $10,000 worth of pearls hidden inside her corsage when she came to Boston on the Arabic from her European honeymoon.

This became known this afternoon when the expert appraisal of her twenty-five trunks was commenced in the appraisers' storehouse.

Deputy Collector Wallace L. Darling and Deputy Surveyor Mann, after a short conference, ordered Mrs. Thompson into the room where her maid had been stripped and searched. Mrs. Wilkins, who discovered the chamois belt full of jewelry on the maid, searched the mistress, and with the same result.

Secured to the inside of her corset, Mrs. Thompson carried a small chamois bag, filled with pearls, some of them in settings. The exact value of the pearls is not yet known. They are being held for appraisal by experts. But Mrs. Thompson's little chamois bag held several thousand dollars' worth.

The twenty-five trunks brought over on the Arabic by Mrs. Thompson were opened and the appraisal of their contents commenced. On account of the great variety in these trunks, it will be necessary to secure half a dozen experts to set prices on the laces, gowns, furs and silks.

The customs authorities are also commencing an investigation into the reason Mrs. Thompson always sailed from Boston. She herself had often been asked about it, and avoided explanation by saying she did not care to sail from New York.

She has been a frequent transatlantic passenger, sailing two or three times a year, and always from Boston.

MILITANT LEADER APPEALS

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, leader of the English militant suffragettes, was taken into custody by United States immigration officials when she arrived here today on board the liner La Provence. She was immediately taken to Ellis Island, where she was given a hearing before a special board of inquiry. The board decided that Mrs. Pankhurst should be excluded from the United States.

She announced that an appeal would be taken from this decision. Until her case is finally decided by Commissioner of Immigration Caminetti in Washington she will be held at Ellis Island.

Mrs. Pankhurst appeared in person before the board and admitted she had been sentenced to jail in England for conspiracy. This crime involves "moral turpitude," and because of this fact the special board decided she should be barred.

During her stay at Ellis Island Mrs. Pankhurst will occupy the same room that was assigned to Cipriano Castro, the "Stormy Petrel" of Venezuela, when he was detained here.

Mrs. Pankhurst showed no traces of the illness from which she suffered while in an English prison. Mild-mannered, sweet-faced and smiling, she appeared anything but an "Apostle of Violence" as she chatted with the newspapermen. She wore a long coat over a dark blue suit, a dark blue hat surmounted by a black quill and brown silk gloves. To the reporters Mrs. Pankhurst said:

Tells How She Left England.

I was convicted under a very peculiar act of Parliament. It is the same act under which men were sent to prison when they were trying to get the franchise.

My act was a political act. I am engaged with other women in a revolution that is very similar to your Militant English suffragette placed under arrest today by the United States immigration authorities upon her arrival in America aboard the liner La Provence from Europe. Under guard she was taken on a special tug to Ellis Island to await an investigation and decision as to whether she is an undesirable alien.

GOV. FELKER THREATENED BY A GUN CRANK

CONCORD, N. H., Oct. 18.—A new and more serious threatening letter has been received by Governor Felker, in connection with the extradition proceedings against Harry Thaw. It read:

"Thaw is not insane. Your life will pay the forfeit if you extradite him. I have a 32-caliber revolver waiting for you."

Governor Felker at once turned the letter over to the State detectives. It has been learned that it came from the southwestern part of Vermont. It was unsigned, but the officials believe they have traces of the writer.

Thaw's lawyers today made a formal demand on William Travers Jerome that he furnish them with a copy of the letter he plans to send Governor Felker, asking for a continuance of the extradition case until October 27.

They declared they will not oppose Jerome's request for a postponement.

"But we will demand," they said, "that Jerome furnish us with a copy of the letter. Misleading statements have been made in letters sent to Governor Felker in the past on the same matter. We want to know just what is said in these missives."

They say Jerome is at the end of his rope, and assert they have no fear of the results through the postponement.

Violin Thief Is Caught by Woman

Six Months for Theft of Old Instrument.

Fred C. Adell, theatrical, of Worcester street, today, in the Municipal Court, pleaded guilty to the theft of a violin, bow and box, valued at $75, and said to be 150 years old, from Miss Jessie M. Wiswell of No. 26 East Brookline street, South End. He was sentenced to six months in the House of Correction.

Adell is a piano salesman. While at Miss Wiswell's home three months ago he noticed that the violin needed a new string. Miss Wiswell gave it to him to fix.

For three months she has been doing her own detective work at yesterday saw Adell at Dudley street and caused his arrest.

Greets Children in Volturno Wreck

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—Ten girls and one woman, all survivors of the Volturno disaster, arrived here from Halifax today on the Red Star steamship Florizel. There followed a happy reunion between Mrs. Pela Pollack, the only woman on the Florizel, and her three young children, who had been torn from her by the sea catastrophy. She had thought them drowned until she arrived here and learned that they had been brought to port by the liner Kroonland.

Scores Killed in German Mine Horror

BERLIN, Oct. 18.—Scores of miners were killed in an explosion of fire damp in a coal mine at Gleiwitz today. The heavy gases emitted from the mouth of the mine has retarded the work of rescue and until the men can enter the mine and explore the inner workings the total casualties will not be known. Several bodies near the surface of the mine have already been recovered.

Heiresses to Found Philippine Mission

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—Mrs. Lorillard Spencer, widow of the multi-millionaire, and Miss Virginia Young, an heiress, today planned further details in connection with the Episcopal mission, which they will establish at their own expense in Jolo, Philippine Islands. The two women will leave for the Philippines to personally direct the work.

Austria Throws Down Gauntlet

VIENNA, Oct. 18.—Austria-Hungary will within forty-eight hours throw down the gauntlet to Servia. Its Charge d'affaires at Belgrade was today instructed to demand emphatically the immediate evacuation of Albania by the Servians.

2 Russian Army Aviators Killed

MOSCOW, Oct. 18.—Two more deaths were added to the long list of aviation fatalities today when a military aviator named Kletchitsky and his mechanic were killed when their machine fell during a heavy gale at Kalugs.

Policeman Kills a Deer in Providence

PROVIDENCE, Oct. 18.—A deer wandered out of the woods into the business section here and became so confused that it crashed into a plate glass window of a bakery on North Main street. It was killed by a policeman, because of injuries.

WROTE OF POISON DREAD IN LETTER TO JUNE'S CHUM

Mrs. Jennie May Eaton, accused of slaying her husband, Rear Admiral Joseph Giles Eaton, feared at one time that her husband would accuse her or her elder daughter June as the slayer of their adopted baby boy.

This sensation in the death trial at Plymouth came today in the reading of a letter sent by Mrs. Eaton to Miss Grace Byram Howard, a trained nurse of New Bedford and a former neighbor of the Eatons at Assinippi. This letter was introduced when Miss Howard was called to the stand this afternoon.

MRS. EATON WROTE LETTER TO NURSE.

The baby boy was the one adopted by the admiral four years ago when living in Scituate. The letter sent Miss Howard tells how the child died suddenly and how Mrs. Eaton had ordered an autopsy.

"If poison is found," wrote Mrs. Eaton, "I believe Admiral Eaton will try to fasten it on me or on daughter June."

Mrs. Eaton in the letter asks the nurse, who was a choir singer in the church where the Eatons worshipped, to say that the admiral had tried to flirt with Miss Howard. The accused widow says her husband's conduct had proven to her, her husband was insane. Then she adds:

"June is too innocent, too sweet a child and too tender to be with him. It would be a most pitiable thing that June would have to suffer for the wickedness of an old hypocrite."

Miss Howard, when questioned, denied the admiral had ever tried to flirt with her. She said the letter was "untruthful."

Miss Bessie Collamore, another former neighbor of the Eatons, followed Miss Howard.

Miss Collamore said Mrs. Eaton had asked her if she would "go to court and testify that the admiral had once been very attentive to the witness. Miss Collamore denied the admiral had ever paid her any attention. While she was telling this, Mrs. Eaton burst into audible laughter, and hid her face in the handkerchief.

The two young women were called after Dr. Joseph Frame, the Eaton family physician, had testified that the admiral had declared he never used drugs and then on the day before he died the admiral was cheerful and had joked with the witness.

At 12:40 court adjourned till Monday at 9 a. m.

ESCAPES DEATH IN PLUNGE OF SIXTY FEET

Eighteen-year-old George E. Mulcahy of No. 11 Floyd street, Revere, and the doctors at the Massachusetts General Hospital are wondering how it happened that George is still alive after his sixty-foot fall down the elevator well at the Otis Elevator Company's building at No. 339 A street, South Boston, this morning. The youth was rushed to the hospital, where after careful examination it was found that his only damage was a fractured right leg.

I'm the luckiest man in South Boston," declared Fred Lewis of No. 497 Southampton street, picking himself up and rubbing his shins in a daze after a thirty-foot fall today with other painters, Ralph Tenney of No. 168 Eighth street, and Thomas Kenney of No. 30 Middle street, when a staging ladder on which the three men were painting the house at No. 38 Silver street broke in the middle. Tenney turned a somersault and Kenney landed on top of him.

Both were rushed to the City Hospital, where it was found that they had fractured legs and internal injuries. Lewis went home.

Connecticut Fights Smallpox Scourge

NORWICH, Ct., Oct. 18.—A scourge of smallpox exists in nearly all of the ten or a dozen mill towns and villages of Eastern Connecticut, which are traversed by the Norwich and Worcester trolley lines. Hundreds of cases have been reported. The epidemic failed to attract great attention until recently because of its mild form which led many victims and even many physicians in the towns where it has been prevalent to diagnose it as chicken-pox. The disease had a run of a few days and the victims have not been quarantined, mill hands, children and everyone travelling about while suffering from the malady.

ADMIRAL DENIED USE OF DRUGS, DECLARES DOCTOR ON STAND

EATON FAMILY PHYSICIAN WITNESS AS POISON TRIAL IS RESUMED

grandmother, Mrs. Virginia Harrison, were still today the central figures of interest in the great trial drama—both called to testify for the State against Mrs. Eaton, mother of the gentle Dorothy and daughter of the feeble, white-haired Mrs. Harrison.

Dorothy remained at Plymouth to be near her mother, but planned to leave for her home at Assinippi this afternoon, where Mrs. Harrison went after concluding her testimony.

Court opened at 9.09 a. m. The sun came through the windows of the crowded room for the first time since the trial began, just as Mrs. Eaton was passed to her chair in the centre of the room.

A few feet away from her in the enclosure sat a squad of medical experts, who were marshalled in full force today for the first time. It was an imposing array. They sat around a table on which was a large pitcher of ice water. The group included Professor William T. Whitney of Harvard, Dr. Joseph Frame of Rockland, the family physician; Dr. F. G. Wheeler of Rockland, Dr. A. W. Balch and Medical Examiner Gilman T. Osgood. Dr. Balch is Professor Whitney's assistant.

Chief Justice Aiken announced today's session would close at 1 p. m., when an adjournment was taken until 9 a. m. Monday.

District Attorney Barker then called Dr. Frame.

Q—How long have you lived in Rockland? A.—Eighteen years.

Q—Where were you educated? A.—At Harvard. I was graduated in 1902. But I did not take my degree until two years later.

Q—What has been your practice since? A.—I was connected with the Boston City Hospital for a time, and then came to Rockland, where I have had a private practice ever since.

Q—Have you treated members of the Eaton household? A.—Yes.

Q—When was your first visit there? A.—In February, 1911. At that time I made two visits to treat Mrs. Harrison, mother of Mrs. Eaton.

Q—When did you next visit the house? A.—I made three visits to treat Mrs. Eaton—one in February and two in March of that same Winter. I think I treated Dorothy for a slight cold then, too, while there to treat Mrs. Eaton.

Q—Did you attend Mrs. Eaton at all at those visits? A.—No.

Q—When did you next visit the Eaton house? A.—In August, 1912, to treat Admiral Eaton for a slight ailment. I could tell better by looking at my memoranda.

Witness then took a slip of paper from his pocket. He continued:

The next visit after August, 1912, was on March 1, 1913. I treated Admiral Eaton at that time.

Q.—Did any of the members of the household visit you in your office in Rockland? A.—Yes, I think Dorothy did. And I recall that admiral and Mrs. Eaton did from time to time.

Q.—How many times did Mrs. Eaton visit you at your office? A.—I should say possibly three or four times.

Q.—When you first visited Mrs. Harrison in 1911 did you have any conversation with Mrs. Eaton? A.—Not any that I recall distinctly.

Q.—In later visits? A.—I do.

Q.—Concerning whom did you converse? A.—The admiral.

Q.—What did she say? A.—Mrs. Eaton made a statement about some medicine I had prescribed for her. Either I sent for it or procured it at a Rockland drug store. I asked her on my second visit if she had taken that medicine. She said she had not, because the admiral had had an opportunity to handle it and that she thought it was poisoned and that she would not take it. That was the sum and substance of what she said at that particular time.

Q.—Whether or not she ever talked with you about the admiral's condition? A.—You mean his mental condition?

Q.—Yes. A.—I could not say whether she discussed it at that visit.

Said Admiral Was Not "Right."

Q.—Did she discuss the admiral's mental condition at later visits at your office? A.—Yes, she said that he was not mentally right and that he ought to be examined by two physicians and committed to some institution.

Q.—How frequently did she say that to you? A.—I don't recall at present. But that was the general impression she gave me every time I saw her.

Attorney Morse objected to this reply, but it was allowed to stand.

Q.—Did she come to your office at any time on any other errand than to speak of the admiral's mental condition? Mr. Morse—I object.

The court allowed the question.

A.—I remember at 8.30 one evening she called at my office. She talked about the admiral's mental condition. She was very much concerned about it. She was very anxious that some examination be made to ascertain his mental condition.

Q.—How frequently did she say that to you? A.—I don't recall at present. But that was the general impression she gave me every time I saw her.

Q.—How long have you lived in Rockland? A.—Eighteen years.

Q.—Where were you educated? A.—At Harvard. I was graduated in 1902. But I did not take my degree until two years later.

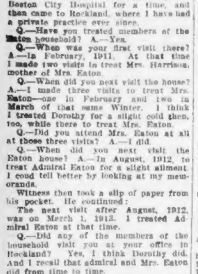
STOPPED HIS DRINKING

This Wife and Mother Saved Her Husband Over Ten Years Ago

SHE WILL GLADLY TELL YOU HOW FREE

Write to Her To-Day. Send No Money. She Has Nothing to Sell

For over 20 years Jas. Anderson of Hillburn, N. Y., was a confirmed drunkard. His case was about as bad as it could be, but a little over ten years ago his devoted wife, after years of trying, finally succeeded in stopping his drinking entirely.



Write to this woman if you have a relative or friend who drinks.

Not only did she save Mr. Anderson but she stopped drinking of her brother and several of her neighbors as well. All this she accomplished with a simple home remedy which any one can get and use. And she now desires to tell every married woman who has a relative or friend who drinks just what it is.

It can be given secretly if desired, and every reader of this notice who is interested in curing a dear one of drinking should write to Mrs. Anderson at once. Her reply will come by return mail in a sealed envelope. She does this gladly, in hopes that others will be benefited as she was. One thing she asks, however, and that is that you do not send money but as she has nothing to sell. Her complete address is 454 Hill Ave., Hillburn, N. Y.

NOTE. This offer should be accepted at once by all who have ever used liquor in any form, every one who has to contend in any way with drunkenness in the home. As Anderson's wife is now giving her method away FREE, THIS NOTICE OUT NOW. Show it to a friend who could use advice and send them, though you to cover it. MAIL IT TO SOMEONE ELSE who you think would like to know what Mrs. Anderson did. In other words, let this notice reach as many as possible. Mrs. Anderson will gladly answer any letter, no matter how many she receives—Adv.

FREE BOOK ON DRINK HABIT

Wives, mothers and men themselves are reporting by the hundreds a really active, safe, quick acting home method of overcoming the drink habit. A very interesting, giving important information, illustrated, will be mailed in plain wrapper, free, by the author, Edward J. Woods, 634 Sixth Ave., 1 060, New York, N. Y., to anyone who applies. Show this advertisement to others who want to save somebody.

THE SISTERS DOROTHY AND JUNE

Certainly no two types could be more decidedly unlike than June and Dorothy. The elder daughter, intensely quiet and creamy white in her pallor, sat absorbed in her own thoughts. She looked weary and sad-eyed. Dorothy, girlish and fresh-cheeked, strove to cheer her sister.—Angela Morgan's contrast of the Eaton sisters.

Mrs. Eaton Was With the Admiral.

Q.—What did you do next, doctor? A.—Why, I prescribed for Mrs. Harrison, sat down beside her bed and talked for a moment, and then went into the admiral's room.

Q.—Where did you find the admiral? A.—In bed.

Q.—Who was in the room at the time? A.—Mrs. Eaton, I believe.

Q.—What did you do in the admiral's room? A.—Why, I asked the admiral how he felt and what he had been eating? He told me that he had been vomiting all night and that he had excruciating pains. I couldn't tell whether he were in his legs or abdomen at that time. He said he was feeling very bad. I took his pulse, which wasn't strong, and under rapid—about eighty, I think. He told me that he had eaten freely of fresh roast pork the night before.

Q.—Did you prescribe for him? A.—Yes.

Q.—What was your diagnosis of his case? A.—Acute indigestion. I gave him five grain bismuth pills to take once every two hours. I also told Mrs. Eaton and the admiral to use hot skim-milk, or bicarbonate of soda.

Q.—Did the admiral make any talk further than what you have already testified to? A.—Why, he said he could taste the roast pork all night.

Q.—What else did he say? A.—He said, "No more roast pork for Joseph."

Q.—How was his manner—cheerful or despondent? A.—Why, I should say cheerful under conditions. I could see he pain don't feel real well in times like that. He was perfectly clear-headed, so far as I could see. I wouldn't call it despondency.

Q.—He joked once with you, didn't he, doctor? A.—Yes, once or twice, I guess.

Q.—How long were you in the room, doctor? A.—Oh, probably ten minutes.

Q.—Did you have any conversation with Mrs. Eaton before you left the house? A.—No, none that I can remember.

Q.—When were you were next called by Mrs. Eaton? A.—About ten minutes or 8, Saturday morning, I should say.

Says Admiral Was Dead.

Q.—How and by whom? A.—By Mrs. Eaton herself over the telephone.

Q.—What did she say? A.—"The admiral has died. Come right down, doctor."

Q.—What did you say? A.—I told her I couldn't come right down. I told her I couldn't see where there was a hurry about me coming as long as he was dead.

Q.—Did you ask her what time he died? A.—I did.

Q.—What did she say? A.—She made no definite reply at first. I do not recall exactly what she said afterwards, but I think she said he died about 5 o'clock.

Q.—What else did she say to you? A.—She asked me if I would not come down to see her mother.

Q.—And what answer did you make? A.—I told her I would.

Q.—What did you do then? A.—I decided to turn the case over to Medical Examiner Osgood, as I did not exactly understand Eaton's death. I told him on Friday. I called him on the 'phone a little after 6 o'clock that morning and explained the case to him.

Q.—What time did the medical examiner and you go down to the Eaton house that morning? A.—About 10.45.

Q.—Who did you see there? A.—Mrs. Eaton and Dorothy.

Q.—Didn't you see Mrs. Harrison? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you see the admiral's body? A.—Yes.

Q.—Where did you see it? A.—In the bed in his room.

Q.—In practically the same place that you saw him on Friday? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you and Medical Examiner Osgood return to the Eaton house again on Saturday after your first visit in the morning? A.—Yes, in the afternoon.

Q.—Was there any mention of drugs made to you during that day? A.—I don't recall any.

Awoke to Find Husband Dead.

Q.—What did Mrs. Eaton tell you? A.—Why, she said that the admiral had vomited all his medicine and that early in the morning he died as she came into his room, found him on the floor beside the bed partly unconscious, put him back on the bed and he regained consciousness. She said she lay down beside him with her arm under his head. About 5 o'clock in the morning she was awakened by the coldness of the admiral's body and head, and she found him dead.

Q.—Were you present at an autopsy performed by Medical Examiner Osgood Saturday, the day the admiral died? A.—Yes.

At Judge Aiken's suggestion, Mr. Morse and Mr. Barker agreeing, he corroborated Medical Examiner Osgood's testimony about the performing of the autopsy without giving detailed testimony.

Q.—When you came downstairs did Mrs. Eaton say anything to you after the autopsy had been performed? A.—Yes.

Q.—What was it? A.—She asked me if his brain was all right.

Q.—And your reply? A.—I told her it was pretty hard to tell at that time.

Q.—Any further conversation? A.—No.

District Attorney Barker read the Grand Jury and inquest records to refresh the memory of Dr. Frame. Attorney Morse objected on the ground that the prosecutor was too generous in his readings from these transcripts.

Judge Aiken ruled that counsel for the government should use the transcript of the former testimony merely to aid the witness in refreshing his memory instead of placing it a second time on the records.

Dr. Frame's direct testimony lasted fifty minutes. His cross-examination by Attorney William A. Morse, of counsel for Mrs. Eaton, began at 10.15.

Q.—You stated, doctor, that the admiral visited your office on the 3d, 4th and 5th of March, and that the admiral and Mrs. Eaton called on you there? A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you remember the admiral and Mrs. Eaton calling about a scalp wound that the admiral had received?

Q.—Do you know what time that was? A.—It was in June. I can tell by looking at this paper.

Mr. Morse—Never mind the paper. I want your memory on it. A.—It was in June.

Q.—Do you remember whether it was after June's wedding? A.—I don't know.

Q.—Had that scalp wound been stitched before you treated it? A.—Some physician in Boston had dressed it.

Q.—Was it brought to your attention that June was married at the Algonquin Club in Boston. A.—I was given to understand that she was married at the Hotel Vendome.

Prisoner Prompts Counsel.

Mr. Morse turned toward Mrs. Eaton, who spoke for the first time during the trial in court when she said in a half-stage whisper:

"The wedding was at the Vendome and the reception at the Algonquin Club."

Q.—Did you know that Admiral Eaton had given a reception at the Algonquin Club? A.—No.

Q.—Was it mentioned how it happened when Mrs. Eaton and the admiral came to your office? A.—Yes, I got the impression from Mrs. Eaton that the admiral had been under the influence of liquor; that he had taken an automobile ride? A.—No.

Q.—Don't you remember Mrs. Eaton saying that as a joke? A.—I don't remember.

Q.—How long was it after the accident that they called at your office—two days or four weeks? A.—Oh, no, only three or four days.

Q.—Why did you remark to Admiral Eaton in the presence of Mrs. Eaton in the sick-room at Assinippi in March that you would not call to see the admiral next day—was it because you did not consider him a sick man? A.—I had prescribed for him and felt that he would improve.

Q.—Was it because his appearance did not indicate that he was very sick? A.—I felt that he would improve.

Q.—Now, doctor, if his appearance remained substantially the same all day Friday and up to Friday evening, was there any reason why the family should not have gone to bed as usual, without taking any other precaution?

District Attorney Barker objected. He thought it was asking too much of the witness. Judge Aiken allowed the question.

A.—Under my diagnosis as to the cause of the trouble, I cannot see why he should not have improved.

Q.—I did not ask for your opinion as to your prognostication, doctor. I simply want to know if, as you announced in the bed-chamber, that it was not necessary to come next day, why, judging from the appearance of the patient, the family should not have gone to bed as usual without especial precaution? A.—I had prescribed for him. I felt that he would improve. I recall that I left the proviso that if I were needed they could call for me, which would be a natural thing for them to do.

Q.—What need was there for especial concern when you announced that you would not have to come next morning—was there any need of especial care? A.—Well, I left medicine which should have been given him from time to time. I also directed that food be administered, such as milk, for instance, until his stomach quieted down.

Danger in Nausea.

Q.—Then there was no need of care other than to administer food and medicine as prescribed? A.—Provided the vomiting did not continue.

Q.—Did anyone ask you to come again? A.—Not that I remember.

Q.—And you had come to the conclusion that you did not have to come the next morning? A.—I felt that if the looked-for improvement took place it would not be necessary, and that if his condition changed they could send for me.

Q.—Did you look at the admiral's tongue? A.—I don't remember.

Q.—Did you take his temperature? A.—No.

Q.—Did you feel of his pulse? A.—Yes. He said he had a burning thirst.

Q.—Have you ever mentioned that before, doctor? A.—I don't remember.

Q.—Did you notice that he had a severe burning thirst? A.—I don't understand that he had a "severe" burning thirst. He gave me the impression that he had a burning thirst.

Q.—Did he tell you how long he had been vomiting? A.—No. He had been vomiting and purging.

Memory Not Quite Clear.

Q.—Did he tell you that he had been eating fresh pork? A.—He said he had. I don't recall that he did at that time, though it is not clear on that point.

Q.—Did he tell you he had eaten a very hearty dinner of that pork on Wednesday? A.—I don't recall that he did. I rather feel that he did not make that statement about eating the pork on Wednesday.

Q.—Do you remember that myself and Mr. Grogan visited your office two weeks ago and that we wanted you to disclose certain circumstances relative to your examination of Admiral Eaton? A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you remember saying that you did not care to discuss anything with us without the consent of the District Attorney? A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you remember that Mr. Grogan subsequently called at your office and that you talked with him and that you told him that you had given him all the information you had on the matter? A.—I don't remember what I told him. I simply remember that I answered his question.

Q.—Did you say anything to Mr. Grogan at that time about the admiral complaining about pains in his bowels and legs? A.—I don't remember that I did.

Q.—Do you remember Mrs. Eaton asking you to come down after the admiral's death and you answered that there was no need if he was dead? A.—I did.

Q.—Later did you say to Mrs. Harrison, "There is something behind all this?" A.—I remember, but I would not say whether it was before or after the autopsy.

Q.—After you had looked at the body, do you not remember that you made statement to Mrs. Harrison. A.—It was probably at that time I made the statement.

Q.—Why did you call at the Eaton home on March 7? A.—Because on March 1 I had made a visit to Mrs. Harrison and had told the admiral that I would not come again unless called for, and the admiral said he would feel much better if I would call next week.

Prescribed for Mrs. Eaton.

Q.—You have spoken of a visit you made to Mrs. Eaton when she was suffering from the grippe? A.—I did prescribe for her.

Q.—Did she say afterwards that she would not take the medicine because it had gone through the admiral's hands. A.—She did say something of that sort.

Q.—You say that Mrs. Eaton came to you at one time to complain of the admiral's excessive use of liquor? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did she say that the admiral was using liquor and strong, and that he should be put away? A.—She frequently made such complaints.

Q.—Do you remember calling on the admiral in 1912 when he had a severe attack of indigestion? A.—I remember that he had gotten in a terrible condition. I do not remember that he vomited.

Q.—Did you know that to made use of drugs? A.—If he did not occur to me.

Q.—After Mrs. Eaton spoke to you about drugs, did you then ask the admiral if he used drugs? A.—I never asked about drugs.

Often Spoke of Drugs.

Q.—Did not Mrs. Eaton say to you that the admiral should be taken care of because of his excessive use of liquor and drugs? A.—She did say it. She spoke of his using drugs. So far as I know, she may have attributed his mental condition to such causes.

Q.—You thought that his sickenness on March 7 was due to liquor and nothing else? A.—That is absolutely true.

The cross-examination of Dr. Frame ended at 10.35. District Attorney Barker then took up the re-direct examination.

Q.—Did Mrs. Eaton tell you that she did not want any prescriptions sent through the postoffice because they would fall into the admiral's hands? A.—Yes.

By Attorney Morse:

Q.—Was medicine put in an envelope and sent to Mrs. Eaton through the postoffice? A.—I do not recall. I may have sent medicine that way, but my impression is that I had the druggist send it.

Choir Singer Testifies.

After recess, the first witness was Miss Grace Byram Howard of New Bedford. She testified in direct examination by Assistant District Attorney Katzmann that she lived in Assinippi all her life up to three and a half years ago. She was a choir singer in the little church in Assinippi where the Eaton family went to church. This church is within sight of the Eaton home.

Q.—Did you know the Eaton family? A.—Yes.

Q.—Where did you live when you were at Assinippi? A.—About a mile from the Eaton home.

Q.—Were did you first meet the Eaton family? A.—At the little church there.

Q.—Where is that church? A.—Very near the Eaton home.

Q.—Who went to this church of the Eaton family? A.—Mr. and Mrs. Eaton, Dorothy and June.

Q.—What did you do in the church beside attending? A.—I sang in the choir.

Q.—For how long? A.—I couldn't say.

Q.—Did you ever call at the Eaton home? A.—Yes, one evening.

Q.—Who was there? A.—Mrs. Eaton and June.

Spoke About Flirting.

Q.—Did Mrs. Eaton or June say anything about the admiral flirting with women? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did they name any one? A.—No.

Q.—Repeat the conversation as best you can. A.—I can only say that we talked about the admiral's flirting with women.

Q.—Did Mrs. Eaton speak of the admiral's insanity? A.—Not that I can remember.

Q.—Did you receive a written communication from Mrs. Eaton? A.—Yes.

Then Mr. Katzmann showed her envelope and two sheets of note paper written on.

Q.—Is that the communication, Miss Howard? A.—It is.

The note and the envelope was then shown to the lawyers for the defence and admitted as evidence.

Judge Aiken then told Mr. Katzmann to read the letter to the jury. The letter was postmarked Sand Hills, Mass., where the Eatons had a summer cottage four years ago. The date was October 30, 1909. The letter was addressed to Miss Grace Byram Howard, New Bedford, Mass., and was marked personal, underscored.

The letter said:

Letter Is Read.

Sand Hills.

My Dear Miss Grace:

I have a very disagreeable task to perform as I believe you a very nice, good, innocent girl and you know what a sweet, nice girl my daughter June is. I am going to beg you to write me that my husband's (Admiral Eaton) actions towards you were anything but those of a gentleman. Now, you know that last Winter he winked at you as he went into the car and when we all came back on the same car he did it again, so pronounced that you laughed outright. He has winked at you all last Winter in church and you had to stop singing there. Then the night of the musical show his actions were disgraceful, you know.

Now the darling boy (meaning the adopted boy) has died suddenly. I had an autopsy and if poison is found I believe Admiral Eaton will try to fasten it on me or my daughter, June.

Of course you know June is too innocent and too sweet a child and too tender to be with him, and I want you to write me the straight honest truth about my husband's conduct towards you, as I know he is not, and I fully believe he is not in his mind, and his conduct towards you and those of young women prove it to me. It would be a most pitiable thing that this young life, June, would have to suffer for the wickedness of an old hypocrite.

If you do not tell me the truth, write me a dignified letter, as I will be compelled to summon you in court as I should attach the condition insane or not.

As you were very fond of June and know she was well and know what a tender, trusting girl she is, you can understand my girl's position and from doing greater harm. If the poison is found in the baby, you owe it to me to tell me at once.

With regrets that I must write you this letter. Sincerely,

(Signed) JENNIE M. EATON.

I will see that no one will know you.

Denies Winks by Admiral.

Miss Howard was the third woman introduced by the State and the first woman witness not connected with the Eaton household. She is a large girl, with light hair and a fresh complexion. She wore a blue silk waist and a skirt of rough blue material. She was questioned by Assistant District Attorney Katzmann.

Q.—Did Admiral Eaton ever wink at you in church? A.—No.

Q.—Did he ever wink at you while you were singing in church? A.—No.

Q.—At any time going or coming from church? A.—No.

Q.—Did you cease singing at the church? A.—I did.

Q.—Was it because the admiral had winked or stared at you there? A.—No.

Q.—Did you leave the choir because of any reason connected with Admiral Eaton? A.—No.

Q.—Was the admiral's treatment of you at any time or at any place other than that of a gentleman? A.—No.

Q.—Did you answer Mrs. Eaton's letter? A.—No.

HARD FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

It's hard enough to keep house if in perfect health, but a woman who is weak, tired and suffering all of the time with an aching back has a heavy burden to carry. Any woman in this condition may well suspect kidney trouble, especially if the kidney action seems disordered at all. Doan's Kidney Pills have cured thousands of women suffering in this way. It is the best recommended special kidney remedy.

A Boston Woman Testifies—

Mrs. Mary Gallagher, 58 Granger St., Dorchester, Boston, Mass., says: "About two years ago I had pains through my kidneys. I would be troubled by weak kidneys. I had often read about Doan's Kidney Pills, and I got a supply. They soon made away further sign of kidney complaint."

EVELYN NESBIT THAW'S DRAMATIC LOVE STORY

"Cherchez la femme" took the normal French style.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

Miss Beatrice Schwartz apparently didn't wish to be found by Mr. Garvan's industrious searchers. Neither did she wish to be subpoenaed.

First Mr. Garvan sent her one of those little legal messages which the criminal courts seem familiarly called "Brown subpoenas." A "Brown subpoena" is merely a notice from the District Attorney's office to drop around as soon as possible and tell all you know about a certain subject.

But one doesn't have to obey a "Brown subpoena" necessarily, and Mrs. Schwartz's lawyer, Alexander C. Young, told her so.

So Mr. Garvan had a regular Grand Jury subpoena made out for Mrs. Schwartz. A Grand Jury subpoena is a very different proposition. If it is served on you, and you neglect or defy it, you may be adjudged in contempt and fined or imprisoned, if necessary.

Whereupon Messrs. Frost, Mr. Garvan went to the Hotel Pierrepont with the formal subpoena. They were politely informed at the desk that Mr. and Mrs. Beery had gone to Atlantic City. That was no news, nothing being more usual than a trip to the Atlantic City is a splendid summer resort—also it is in the State of New Jersey. Hence Mr. Garvan's subpoenas would not be any good.

Atlantic City Hunt.

Inquiry was made at Atlantic City. No Mrs. Beatrice Schwartz could be found there. Then the policemen from the District Attorney's office, whose business it was to serve said subpoenas were served and who had become accustomed to all sorts of dodges, wondered if the lady and her lover were away from her motel at sea.

The two "suppers," Beery and Mossberg by name went back to the Pierrepont. They knew that the day clerk there was named Charles Peterson. Peterson very thoughtfully provided himself with a subpoena, directing C. Beery to appear immediately at the District Attorney's office.

Beery and Mossberg found, as they expected, that the proprietor and manager of the Pierrepont were both "out."

They went to Chief Beyes and asked for Mrs. Schwartz.

"Gone to Atlantic City," they were suavely told.

The policemen didn't believe it and said so. They demanded to be shown to Mrs. Schwartz's rooms.

"Certainly not," said the clerk.

The policemen wanted no more than Beery drew out the subpoena and thrust it in Beyes' hands, calling his attention to the fact that the document required his immediate presence before Assistant District Attorney Garvan. Beyes started without delay.

Davis pointed the clerk suavely out of the way the two policemen went to the elevator. The elevator man—for everybody seemed to be out—took them to Schwartz—tried to stop them.

Beery came back in a moment and displayed his shield—for he was in plain clothes. He said to the elevator man:

Prepared for Duty.

"We are policemen. A subpoena has been committed and we are here in the line of our duty, to find an important witness. If you interfere with us, you will get into trouble."

The elevator man took the hint. As to look the two officers up to the fourth floor and pointed to the door of Mrs. Schwartz's suite. There they stood in silent guard. They could not force an entrance, but they could serve [illegible] promise if they could only come face to face with Mrs. Schwartz through some ruse.

The men waited and waited. No sound came from the room.

After an hour Beery whispered to Mossberg: "Maybe we've made a mistake and she isn't here at all."

But the men kept to their post.

Finally a bellboy appeared down the hall, bearing a pitcher of ice water. He bowed for Mrs. Schwartz's door.

Beery nodded to the boy to keep quiet and not speak to them, but to go ahead and deliver the ice water. The boy knocked at the door. Mrs. Schwartz appeared. Beery stepped inside and served two subpoenas on the woman, one for that day and one for the next.

"If it hadn't been for thirst you wouldn't have got me," said Mrs. Schwartz with a smile at Beery, as she accepted the subpoenas.

Mrs. Schwartz did not get to Mr. Garvan's office that day, nor the next, nor the next. Word was given out that she was ill. So Garvan sent a stenographer to the Pierrepont with Beery, to take any declaration Mrs. Schwartz had to give.

Mrs. Schwartz also gave a brief statement to the newspapers, denying that she ever heard Thaw threaten to shoot White. Mr. Garvan, nothing finally obtained a deposition from Mrs. Schwartz, did not seem to attach any tremendous importance to it. In fact, the episode was interesting chiefly, as showing the persistence of the District Attorney's office in going after every source of information, also the efforts made by many people to evade being drawn into the sensational case.

Jerome Returns.

On July 12 District Attorney Jerome returned to New York. He had been rounding out his vacation at Lakeville, Conn. He had left the case wholly to Assistant District Attorney Garvan so far, being apparently confident that Mr. Garvan was well able to handle the preliminary steps of rounding up witnesses and so forth. Jerome went to his office in the Criminal Courts building. Garvan came in and the two talked the case over in detail.

Jerome seemed wholly satisfied when he came out from the conference, but he had nothing to say except the hope that he expected to put Thaw on trial early in October.

This was good news for Harry from one standpoint at least. It meant only two months more of being shut up in "Murderers' Row" before getting his trial and—as he confidently expected—his acquittal.

But the prosecution looked for no acquittal. It felt so sure that Jerome and his assistants, Garvan and Vandiver, made ready for a bit of a trip South. Garvan said:

To date the State has secured statements from forty-three witnesses, of whom eleven are girls and women, the rest men. In addition, a number of persons have been seen who were found to have nothing of interest to the State.

Through my investigation into this crime I have been piled up a mock heap of depravity monstrous in its size and sickening in its complexion.

Stories of debauchery, strange excesses and vitrd practices have multiplied until it is hard for a decent man, no matter how well he thinks he knows the town, to realize that such things have gone on.

Plot Is Revealed.

Among those whom I examined closest and whose contributions to the vice heap are most nauseous, were representatives of the common type of the Tenderloin—waiters, chorus girls, bellboys, cab drivers, private detectives, chauffeurs, doorkeepers, theatre hands, models, valets and other habitues of that part of the city.

We are confident of showing that this crime was contemplated for months. We can show, also, that there was no reason founded, either on the basis of outraged honor or desire of vengeance for insults and wrongs, which could possibly have inspired Harry Thaw to kill Stanford White.

To Be Continued.

EVELYN THAW TODAY

Whatever was taboo as to my past did not extend to Harry and myself. He spoke of it again and again. It was so completely an obsession that I began to fear for his reason and reproach myself for ever having married him.—From Evelyn's life story in tomorrow's Sunday American.

Evelyn Thaw Comes To Boston Tomorrow

Brings Son on Trip to Fill Engagement at Theatre.

Evelyn Thaw will come to Boston on an early forenoon train Sunday. She made this announcement today at her quarters in the Crown Hotel, Providence, where she has been staying during the past week with her son Russell, her maid, and Russell's nurse.

During her stay in New England, Evelyn has been literally besieged by crowds of the curious, the majority being women. For the first time yesterday, she ate dinner in the public dining room of her hotel. As soon as word had spread that she was at one of the tables, the room filled rapidly.

Evelyn missed her meal as calmly as if no one was looking at her. On her way to the elevator she was forced to pass through two thick lines of spectators.

When Evelyn comes to Boston tomorrow morning, it will be to fill her engagement of one week at the Shubert Theatre, playing two performances a day in "Mariette," her new musical and dancing divertissement.

United Cigar to Buy Riker-Jaynes

That negotiations have been in progress for a week looking to the purchase of the Riker-Hegeman-Jaynes drug stores by the United Cigar Stores Company was announced today in a New York dispatch credited to the Sun which adds:

It was said by a person in authority that the $50,000,000 deal will be completed within a week.

Louis K. Liggett, president of Liggett's string of drug stores, denied positively that there was any possibility of a combination between the Liggett stores and the Riker-Hegeman stores. He said their interests were entirely apart.

12 New Lawyers Admitted to Bar

Twelve new lawyers were admitted to practice in Massachusetts today. Justice Loring of the Supreme Court administered the oath. They are: Richard Ames, son of the late Dean Ames of the Harvard Law School; George E. Stephenson, James Buchanan, Jr., Edward L. Durkin, Lewis Goldberg, Richard W. Hall, John W. F. Hobbs, Lewis Hyman, Edwin H. Jose, Jr., I. Burt Lazanes, Edward S. Stickney and Laurie Vold.

Stop Business of 17 More Concerns

Seventeen more corporations were stopped from doing further business by an injunction issued by Judge Loring of the Supreme Court, because these corporations failed to file their tax returns with the Tax Commissioners. Attorney-General Swift filed the motions for the injunctions.

HEAR SENATORS WILL REPORT CURRENCY BILL

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—Advices received by the Wall Street today indicate that the Senate Banking and Currency Committee will bring in a unanimous report on the currency bill about November 10. Full consideration of the amendments to be offered by the Republican members will be given and supporters of the administration are confident there will be no minority report.

Important changes in the bill are forshadowed in the informal discussions being held between members of the committee. The following changes are regarded as certain:

The substitution of an appointive committee for the committee consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Comptroller of the Currency, which will frame and start the new banking system.

The elimination of the Secretary of Agriculture and Comptroller of the Currency from the Federal Reserve Board. It is possible that the Secretary of the Treasury will also be stricken out of the board.

Lawful money as reserve for note issues will be stricken out.

Conditions under which State banks may join the system will be more carefully restricted in an effort to equalize State and national bank issues.

Open market transactions of federal reserve banks will be extended to include domestic bills of exchange.

The section dealing with the rediscounting of 2 per cent. bonds will be recast.

Paring of checks will be confined to bank paper, leaving individual checks open to exchange rates to be fixed by competition.

Killed While Hunting.

LITTLE COMPTON, R. I., Oct. 18.—Frank Hall of Stowe was killed while hunting with Thomas Gibbs in the woods near here, when the trigger of Gibbs' gun got caught by a twig, and the gun was discharged.

Suddenly Blind!

Due to Tobacco Habit.

There are multitudes of known cases wherein persons have gradually ruined their eyesight and impaired their whole system through the use of tobacco, and many instances of sudden falling of vision (amaurosis) are also recorded.

If you are a tobacco user and are troubled with any weakness in your eyes—BEWARE. Your doctor will doubtless tell you that you are in danger, even if you cannot realize it yourself.

If you want to get rid of the habit gradually and pleasantly, so that you have no desire for tobacco in any form, or if you want to control the desire so you may enjoy an occasional cigar, chew, pipeful or cigarette without harming yourself, write for free book to Allen Co., 124 E. 23d St., 327 C, New York City; or send fifty cents in stamps for the remarkable remedy.

PANKHURST CALLS ASQUITH "THE KING"

American Revolution. The conditions against which we women are fighting now is practically taxation without representation.

"You think then that your fight is exactly George V. just as the other fight was against George III.?" was suggested.

"Not King George V.," declared Mrs. Pankhurst militantly. "You mean King George."

"Well, well," she continued, "we have a perfect aristocracy in a somewhat broad trade union. One obstinate old gentleman keeps locked the doors to reform."

Tells How She Left from England.

In explanation of the statement that she had run away from the other side, Mrs. Pankhurst declared that she had only left her country after the greatest deliberation.

"No one arrested me," she said. "No one intimated that I would be placed under arrest. I took the Continental train on my way to France. The newspapers mentioned the matter, although the newspaper men were there. I know I was not arrested. I considered that my sentence had either lapsed or terminated and that I was free. I trusted the French government considered me free.

"Are you going to advise the American women to be militant?" she was asked. She said:

She Hates Coming of Redmond.

"The women of every nation must work out their own salvation. No one offered me the leadership here. I couldn't accept it if they did. I can't tell them what to do. There has been so much talk about my coming to America. Why should there be? Men have come here—from Ireland, for instance—Parnell and Redmond. They have come here to tell their story for the betterment of Ireland and they have raised aid and sympathy and received it, too, from this great liberty-loving nation.

The special board that decided against Mrs. Pankhurst consisted of Inspectors Stewart, Tighe and Scheil. The militant leader was the only one examined, and she was allowed to tell her story without interruption. Lawyers took no part in the hearing.

The immigration men met Mrs. Pankhurst on board the liner before it docked. She greeted them with a cheery smile.

"Good morning," said Inspector Williams, who was first to approach Mrs. Pankhurst.

"Good morning," was the smiling reply.

Williams at once explained his errand. "I understand that you were imprisoned in England on the charge of arson," said Williams.

"That is not so," replied Mrs. Pankhurst. "I was arrested and convicted of conspiracy and I served my time in prison. I was released because of the serious condition of my health. I am far from being a well woman."

"It is my duty to detain you temporarily until the records of your case can pass upon your case," said Williams. "You may be represented by counsel if you wish."

Mrs. Pankhurst made no reply and Williams withdrew immediately to the dock where the militante leader was approached by Jean Wicksun, her advance agent. Miss Wicksun, while here, came over on the voyage from France with her, and Herbert Reeves, an attorney who had been engaged by Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, the New York suffragist.

Before Mrs. Pankhurst retired to her stateroom, she received the reporters and permitted them to inspect a silver medal which she wore on her bosom. She explained that the six bars across the ends represented the six imprisonments.

Wallie Mrs. Pankhurst was in her stateroom making preparations for the journey to Ellis Island, an immigration officer stood guard outside her door. Ellis Island officials made complete preparations for their inquiry which included several unusual features. By order of Commissioner General of Immigration Caminetti, a representative of the Washington office was present at the sitting of the inquiry board, which was composed of Acting Commissioner Uhl of New York and three inspectors.

Mrs. Pankhurst's last imprisonment resulted from her conviction of conspiracy in connection with the burning by suffragists of Lloyd George's home. She was sentenced to nine months imprisonment. Hunger and thirst strikes have gained her freedom twice or three times since then, and her health has been seriously impaired.

MRS. RANTOUL WINS FIGHT ON MODEL DIET

Mrs. Iris Rantoul won last night in round the first and third rounds of her two children, by a decision of Henry F. Hurlburt, sitting as master today.

Mrs. Rantoul and her husband have separated, under a court decree giving the custody of the children. Mrs. Rantoul claimed that her husband, when the children were with him, did not feed them properly, not properly examine the throat, ears and lungs of the two children. Harriet is eight and Mabel nine.

Edward L. Rantoul lives at Beverly Farms. The children stay with him part of the time, but Master Harrison ruled that he must follow the menus his mother suggests at these times. These menus include the following:

BREAKFAST

Rice Fruit Cereal and Cream Soft Boiled Eggs Bacon or Toast

DINNER

Baked Potato Cream of Corn Starch Steak or Chop

Custard or Corn Starch Pudding

No Pastry

SUPPER

Bread, Butter and Milk

Cold Rice Pudding or Stewed Prunes or Apple Sauce

No Cake

No tea or coffee is to be given the children at any meals.

Mrs. Rantoul complains that at the last visit of her children to their father their diet was not carefully looked after. One child was taken ill with tonsilitis. Mr. Rantoul discharged the nurse. He also refused, it is claimed, to call a doctor.

Mrs. Rantoul also complains he allowed the children to be irregular in their sleep. When they should have gone to bed at 7 o'clock, he allowed them to pore over picture books till 9 o'clock and they often fell asleep in their day clothes.

Pope Watches Flames Sweep Sisters' Home

ROME, Oct. 18.—The lives of two sisters of Pope Pius X. were endangered today by fire that swept the house in which they had been dwelling, opposite the Vatican. From a window the Pope watched the flames inside the house. As soon as it was known that neither of the aged women was injured, His Holiness went to the private chapel and gave thanks.

Mrs. Joseph Blake to End Mackay Suit

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—Mrs. Joseph A. Blake, wife of New York's foremost surgeon, will withdraw her $1,000,000 alienation suit which she filed last week against Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay. Negotiations are now pending and a definite decision is expected to be reached by Tuesday.

If the suit is withdrawn it will be with the expressed stipulation that Dr. Blake return to his home. These facts were given out today from an authoritative source.

'Philadelphia? Never for Me,'--Mr. Astor

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 18.—Mrs. John Jacob Astor, divorced wife of the late John Jacob Astor, has no idea of living in Philadelphia. She has not decided where she will live, according to her own admission, made today. "Philadelphia? Never!" she remarked.

Angela Morgan Describes Mrs. Harrison on Stand

By ANGELA MORGAN

A woman accused against her husband. Mother love, woman training, either instinct to protect its own, forced to appear [illegible] to defend the accused of his affection. This was the tragic situation at Falconer when Mrs. Harrison, the agent's wife, was on the stand. Her words at times for the accused, at times against.

It was a scene even more touching than when widow-stricken Mrs. Hyde appeared for or against Harrison.

A train of defense girls passed over the stand, each more beautiful than the last, each woman, as drawn, pale face lined with grief and pain, went on the stand to speak for her husband. She sat down quietly, gravely, her face composed, yet full of suffering.

She looked straight across the room from her place on the stand, her daughter near that, daughters, sons. When at last Mrs. Harrison left the stand, she walked to the door, paused, looked her head and gave way to tears, even the grim guards of Mrs. Harrison's withdrawal and she was conducted to wipe the moisture from her eyes.

Those, when questioned as to the only adopted by the Admiral and Mrs. Harrison put forward with [illegible] and said emphatically, yet quietly:

"I decline to answer that question. I know nothing about that matter."

Mrs. Harrison made a wonderful picture of nobility and strength as she sat on the witness stand. Her white-haired, darkeyed, intensely serious, her personal appeal to the courtroom was instantaneous and magical.

SULZER TURNS DOWN OFFER FROM MOOSE

ALBANY, N. Y., Oct. 18.—William Sulzer, deposed Governor, today declined the Progressive nomination on a Progressive platform. He had been offered the nomination from the Twentieth district, run through his secretary, Chester C. Platt, by announcing his intention of making his future political efforts on State affairs.

Every man who composes the direct primary bill will be elected, declared Sulzer tonight to William Sulzer's three leading rap inscribed "William Sulzer, Governor." Sulzer was deposed by the current issues, Friday, October 17, 1913."

Dark clouds are looming for A. Hen[illegible] whom Sulzer appointed his chief graft investigator. The Democratic organization is to open a hot fight on Hennessy. It will be based on the fact that Hennessy is a friend of Thomas Farley, the office of the State Comptroller. A demand for the impeachment of Sulzer is expected to develop.

Two criminal charges hang over the head of Sulzer. One is based on the provision of the law that conviction before a court of impeachment is no par[illegible] from criminal prosecution and the other is based upon a court of criminal conviction.

The men who oppose Sulzer made it known today that they propose to present to the use of this weapon the moment he starts anything.

U. S. REFUSES TO RECOGNIZE GEN. BLANQUET

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—The United States will refuse to recognize General Blanquet if he is chosen by the Huerta cabinet to succeed the President Provisional of Mexico. This was learned at the State Department today after Acting Secretary Moore had called the Charge d'Shaughnessy for details of Huerta's plans to abdicate.

While the succession of Pedro Lascurain or Francisco Gamboa to the presidency in Mexico would not be tantamount to the United States and would remove all obstacles to recognition by this government, President Wilson will not recognize Blanquet, because of his record and the belief that he is a tool of Huerta.

It is expected that the Mexican government will be notified of this information as soon as confirmation of the resignation of Huerta reaches here.

"Nelson" Blanquet as a man equally objectionable to the United States, said Dr. William Bayard Hale at the White House today. He is a man of the Huerta type and has been a tool of the existing regime. He is commonly supposed to be the man who arrested Madero and many Mexicans say that he inspired the intrigue which resulted in the assassination of President Madero.

General Huerta has played a desperate game in his efforts to retain the dictatorship of Mexico, but the end is near and it is therefore more firmly established than ever before. Official announcement was made today that he had offered his resignation to the Mexican Cabinet, but that it had been refused.

The cabinet's action was not due to its loyalty to Huerta, but to the fact that its members were unable to unite on a man to succeed him. They were almost evenly divided between Pedro Lascurain, Madero's Minister of Foreign Affairs, and General Blanquet, Commander in Chief of the Army.

7 Miners Entombed.

ROCKDALE, Tex., Oct. 18.—Seven of the eight miners caught in the Vogel and Lawrence mine when the roof caved in and the mine was flooded, are still alive, entombed by a water barrier ninety feet below the surface.

Stops Tobacco Habit in One Day

Sanitarium Publishes Free Book Showing How Tobacco Habit Can Be Banished in From One to Five Days at Home.

The Elkon Sanitarium located at 440 Elkon Building, Main St., Lafayette, Ind., has published a free book telling how the tobacco habit can be banished in from one to five days at home.

Men who have used tobacco for many years, and who have tried in vain to break away from the habit, declare that after using the Elkon treatment for a few days they lost all desire for tobacco in any form. Many who have used tobacco for over fifty years say that they have no craving for it whatever since using the Elkon treatment. Many who have used tobacco for over fifty years say that they have no craving for it whatever since using the Elkon treatment. Many who have used tobacco for over fifty years say that they have no craving for it whatever since using the Elkon treatment.

The Elkon Sanitarium is not a new institution, but has been established for many years. It is a reliable institution, and any reader who writes to the Elkon Sanitarium for the free book will receive it by return mail, postpaid. Write today, as you may not see this announcement again.

MUCK PROGRAM AT SYMPHONY INTERNATIONAL

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

The Symphony program yesterday afternoon was international in character, since it carried the names of Glazounoff, a Russian, Grieg, a Norwegian, Franck, a Frenchman, and Dvorak, a Bohemian. How rarely does an American figure on these programs, by the way, and of those who do appear how few can stand comparison with the great Europeans!

There is always some system in a Muck program and thus, while none of the composers displayed yesterday can be reckoned among the greatest of the masters, each has done his part in the development of music from the strictly classic form to the modern freedom from barriers.

The Fifth Symphony of Glazounoff held the place of honor. Here is a Russian Symphony which is not revolutionary, which adheres with sufficient fidelity to the ideals of Beethoven and Mozart, but which manages to convey a good deal of the barbaric color and the fury and wildness of the modern Russian.

There are times when Glazounoff almost touches cacophony; his successors, for this is a twenty-year-old Symphony, revel in it. There are fresh and fetching melodies and quaint and charming rhythms in the Glazounoff Symphony, and in orchestral magnificence that is truly Russian.

Edward Grieg's Concert-Overture in Autumn is based on a Grieg song, "In Autumn," and a Norwegian harvest song. Its two melodies are very dainty and it is set in orchestration worthy of this composer.

The Cesar Franck Symphonic Poem, Les Eolides (Daughters of the Winds), is descriptive music, but like most Franck works it is so formless and so slightly imaginative that even with the poem of de Lisle before us, most of us are unable to follow the fancies of the composer. As absolute music it is not admirable. Dvorak's Overture Husitska is not among his best works.

Jealousy Splits Bill of Star Trio Here

Lady Stewart-Richardson, Polaire and Hoffmann Go Own Ways.

Lady Constance Stewart-Richardson, Polaire and Gertrude Hoffmann will appear as a three-star combination for the last two times today at a Boston theatre. "Petty jealousies, outraged temperaments —the fact no stage is large enough for these three," is given as an explanation by one of the organizers of the combination. After tonight they will go their separate ways.

Morris Gest has given the usual "two weeks' notice." The engagement as triple star will close in Philadelphia two weeks from tonight.

The first hint of trouble came when one of the stars declared her departure for this country when she heard another was on the same ship. It has been going on in ever-increasing ratio since.

"I visited the company in Boston," said Mr. Gest, "and found some mutual bickering that there was nothing else to do but quit the company."

"Miss Hoffmann will start at the head of her own company in her new revue. My plans for Polaire and Lady Constance Stewart-Richardson are not complete."

TOBACCO HABIT

A very interesting book has been published on the tobacco habit—how to conquer it quickly and easily. It tells the dangers of excessive smoking, chewing or snuffusing, etc., and explains how nervousness, irritability, sleeplessness, weak eyes, stomach troubles and numerous other disorders may be eliminated through stopping self-poisoning by tobacco. The man who has written this book wants to genuinely help all who have become addicted to the tobacco habit, and says there's no need to suffer that awful craving or restlessness which comes when one tries to quit suddenly. This is no mild cure at temperance sermon tract, but plain common sense, clearly set forth. The author will send it free, postpaid, in plain wrapper. Write, giving name and full address—a post card will do. Address: Edward J. Woods, 534 Sixth Ave., 208 E. New York City, and if you know any other persons who would like to read the book, you can send their names (with initials and full addresses) also. Keep this advertisement; it may prove to be the best piece of news you ever read in this journal.

What Some of the Seven Are Doing and Saying Now

Mr. Walsh sees in the Public Futilities Commission's approval of the New Haven bond issue, an argument for a veto power for the Governor. But what good does a veto do, if New Haven Cellar Men can overrule it?

* * *

"Gardner Raps Bird's Viewpoint," headlines a morning paper. Wonder if that's the "wallop" he's been pounding? And just what part of the anatomy is the "viewpoint," anyway?

* * *

"It's the greatest fight I ever had," says Governor Foss—after one day of it. What will he say after a couple of weeks?

* * *

Colonel William A. Gaston called on the Governor, but assures us that politics did not figure in the conversation.

* * *

Mr. Bird says he has been studying the governmental organization of Massachusetts for a year. But you can't learn much, even in college, in one year.

* * *

Mr. Bird is urging a budget but when Massachusetts gets into the New Haven grip, you can't budge it with anything short of dynamite.

* * *

There's one thing about Governor Foss. He's talking about matters of local interest, and isn't trying to make issues out of "Why Immigrants Are So?"

* * *

"Give Gardner Send Off," eight-point-caps the Gardner organ. If the "send off" is sufficiently vigorous, we'll lend the force of our toe to it.

* * *

"I'm an independent-independent," says Governor Foss, which reminds us of something or other.

* * *

Julian Hawthorne, upon leaving Atlanta prison, says that the board and lodging at that estimable hostelry are abominable. However, Mr. Hawthorne and one Charles W. Morse are in accord in the statement that Atlanta's pardoning facilities are unexcelled.

* * *

And there's another consideration. Like any other resort with bad food and poor beds—you don't have to go to Atlanta if you don't want to.

* * *

President Huerta is thinking of calling off the Mexican election and just sitting tight in the Presidential chair. Why isn't that a suggestion for Governor Foss?

* * *

It is interesting to see how the different candidates stand on the railroad issue in this campaign.

Mr. Walsh says: "I believe in strict regulation, and possible State ownership of the Boston & Maine."

Mr. Bird says: "The new administration should be given a chance, but the New Haven should be forced to conform strictly to the laws."

Mr. Foss says: "The State must begin to boss the New Haven, instead of the New Haven's bossing the State."

While Mr. Gardner says: "I'll talk it over with President Elliott of the New Haven. But immigration must be restricted."

* * *

You will recall that Mr. Gardner claims to be progressive.

* * *

Interval, for lawfter.

* * *

Mr. Foss is counting on his old campaign overman to enable him through this fight. He's worn it in every campaign for years.

* * *

Wonder what brand of moth-ball Mrs. Foss uses?

* * *

Republican Candidate for Lieutenant Governor Goetting has as his platform "Give and Let Live." The New Haven Collar Men are wishing the voters would adopt that platform.

* * *

In the scramble of counting up the seven candidates for Governor, we almost failed to note the absence of Mr. Anson B. Edgerly of Boston.

Well, he'll be here eight, anyway.

* * *

As soon as Mayor Fitzgerald announced that he would not seek re-election, Congressman Murray rushed on to confer with His Honor.

Mind you, we're not saying a word.

* * *

Candidate Bird sees in the Foss candidacy only another alibi for Gardner. Oh shucks—Gardner!

Auto News

By J. C. KERRISON.

The annual Fall outing and dinner of the Boston Automobile Dealers' Association at the Belmont Springs Country Club yesterday afternoon and evening was another of those enjoyable events that this organization is noted for. In fact, it brought out one of the largest crowds that has attended a Fall outing.

As a majority of the members are now devotees of golf there was a lot of keen enjoyment for the members and guests who were over the links in the afternoon. The "Big Time" came in the evening when the annual dinner was served in the clubhouse.

President John MacAlman, who has long since come to be recognized as the perpetual president of this organization, was the toastmaster, and he was never in better form. His satirical and humorous shafts kept the crowd in convulsions. Most of the evening was given up to speechmaking and few were overlooked by the speakers.

Among those present were: Frank B. Crockett, V. A. Charles, R. L. Eads, Harry Fosdick, E. A. Gilmore, G. E. Hubich, A. B. Healey, F. A. Hinchcliffe, John H. Johnson, J. W. Maguire, C. P. Rockwell, George A. Crittendon, R. R. Hoss, E. A. Travis, W. C. Ellis, F. E. Wing, J. L. Judd, J. S. Hathaway, Chester L. Campbell, John J. McNamara, James T. Sullivan, John D. Murphy, John F. Mahoney, Charles F. Marden, Harry F. Martin, W. F. Robinson, R. R. Robinson, Elliot Ware, Corliss Wadleigh, Conrad Smith, G. B. Kimball, Harry K. Noyes, Arthur Hawes, George McNear, Walter B. Bliss, Fresno Willis, Edward Saunders, Norman Halliday, Howard Linnie, Theodore Earle, Harry Wolliver, Charles Howell, Ralph Colburn.

The dealers never forget "Pop" Low. At the dinner President MacAlman spoke feelingly of his absence and reminded the members of his sterling character. "Pop" is now an invalid and had sent his regrets to the "boys." Resolutions were drawn and signed by all present and these will be sent to him.

Smith Says He Can Beat Jack Johnson

White Heavyweight Champion Declares He Once Dropped Johnson in Training Bout.

By JACK CONWAY.

"GUNBOAT" SMITH, who clashes with Tony Ross in a twelve-round bout at the Atlas A. A. on next Tuesday evening, is a confident young man. The "white hope" destroyer believes that he will be the next world's heavyweight champion. The former tar does not fear those four dusky gladiators—Jack Johnson, Sam Langford, Joe Jeanette and Sam McVea.

Jim Buckley's protege has made several attempts to secure a match with Langford. The men were recently signed to battle in Madison Square Garden, New York, but the contest was prevented by the New York Boxing Commission.

The majority of fight "fans" believe that the "Tar Baby" would be able to conquer Smith, as he has the rest of the white heavyweights who have crossed his path. The "Gunboat," however, declares that Sam is too fat, and says that he would prove too fast and rugged for the Cambridge lefter.

Smith does not consider Johnson the best man in his class today. He asserts that the Galveston man has sapped his vitality by dissipation, and that he will be beaten by the first good man whom he meets.

ONCE KNOCKED JOHNSON DOWN.

SMITH is acquainted with Johnson's style of fighting, as he was a member of the champion's training camp when he was preparing for his bout with the late Stanley Ketchel.

Smith claims that he once knocked Johnson through the ropes while boxing with him. Here is what Smith had to say in discussing the matter recently:

"Johnson thought I was a joke at a boxer. Of course, I was clever, but I knew that if I could score one punch I would make the champion give ground. One day when I was boxing with the Galveston man, I landed a terrific right hand punch back of Johnson's ear and he was knocked clean through the ropes. I will repeat my feat if I am able to secure another engagement with the title holder."

The white heavyweight champion is expected to arrive in Boston today and will complete his training at the Atlas Club.

HOSS DUE HERE TODAY.

TONY HOSS is also due in this city today. Smith will naturally rule a favorite in the betting, but Ross should give him a hard tussle. The Italian glove wielder has had more experience than Smith and will outweigh him by about 15 pounds. Smith never weighs more than 180 pounds, while Ross scales at 195 pounds when he is in the best of condition.

JOHNNY MOONEY is back in Boston again, after spending the greater part of the 88numer and early Fall at various resorts throughout the East. Johnny passed several pleasant weeks at Atlantic City, while he also visited Golf Falls, N. H., Silver Lake, Me., East Wintarop, Me., and took in that little bout between the Athletics and Giants, after which he made an automobile trip through New York State.

Mooney says that he never felt better in his life. During the Winter and Spring he is often kept busy eighteen and twenty hours a day, and realizes that he must rest during the Summer in order to retain his health.

When asked by the writer whether he was planning to promote any boxing matches this coming Winter, Mooney declared he has received several offers to head boxing clubs, but that he will not accept any of them until he is convinced that he will be able to conduct his shows without any interference, and on a high standard.

GALLANT BUSY AGAIN.

JOHNNY GALLANT, the hard hitting Chelsea lightweight, is ready to resume business within the squared enclosure. Johnny was forced to rest for over a month, as he broke one of his hands in his bout with Al Ketchel.

Gallant is able to punch as hard as any lightweight in this section of the country and will give the best of them a merry tussle for supremacy. He would like to get a whirl with Eddie Murray when the latter returns from the West.

MURPHY BATTLES DUFFY.

MURPHY, by the way, will battle Jimmy Duffy of Buffalo in St. Louis next Tuesday evening. The South Boston lad is a "big card" in St. Louis as a result of his victory over Harry Trendall. Trendall is a St. Louis boy and was being boosted as an opponent for Willie Ritchie. To make a long story short he was signed to meet Murphy and Eddie Brezett in an easy winner.

Duffy has fought many of the leading lightweights in the country, but will have to travel at a fast pace in order to hold his own with Murphy. Eddie has been made a 10 to 8 favorite in the betting.

RITCHIE IS AMBITIOUS.

WILLIE RITCHIE says that he will prove that he is a real champion when he exchanges punches with Leach Cross in a ten-round encounter in New York the latter part of next month. Ritchie is training hard and intends to knock out Cross if possible.

We have it on good authority that Cross is able to take a few stiff punches on the point of the jaw without seeking a soft spot on the canvas. It is also rumored that Leachie is able to punch a little himself.

LETTER FROM "MIKE TWIN."

"MIKE TWIN" SULLIVAN takes his trusty pen in hand and writes that his brother Jack would like to meet the winner of the Smith-Ross bout. Michael also advances the information gratis that he is open to talk business with Mike Gibbons, Jimmy Clabby, George Chip and the rest of the middleweight boxers. You, dear reader, Mike did not forget to sign himself as the welterweight champion.

LOUGHERY FIGHTING STRONG.

THE following letter received by the writer today explains itself:

Mr. Jack Conway, Boston AMERICAN.

DEAR SIR:—I am writing these few lines in the interest of the most aggressive and fearless welterweight boxer in the world, Frank Loughery of Philadelphia, whose latest triumph was a clear-cut decision over the clever Italian welterweight title, Johnny "Kid" Alberta. The Pittsburgh boy among the list wonders gained at the Nonpareil A. C. last night.

Frank Loughery, who has yet to be knocked off his feet, and has never lost a referee's decision, has no man of his weight in the world who will hesitate one minute to limit ringside.

During the past year and a half, Loughery has met the toughest and best men in his division, and only once was he outpointed and then only by a small margin in a ten-round bout.

Mixing with Jack Britton, who refused to meet Loughery over the fifteen-round route.

During his time he has met and defeated such men as Johnny Willetts, Red Robinson, Joe Stelz, "Young" Nitchie, Dave Curtis, Phil Cocco, Terry McGovern, K. O. Brennan, Frankie Conley, "Young" Joe Gans, Battling Hurley twice, "Young" Otto, Dave Dunker and Johnny Kelly, Alberta.

He fought draws with "Young" O'Neil, Battling Hurley and Frank Peralta. While in London he defeated Jem Sullivan in England in seven rounds and stopped Harry Piet in Paris in five rounds and fought a 6-6 exhibition draw with George Carpentier, the French middleweight, who has since defeated into a heavyweight.

Yours truly,
BERNARD LOUGHERY, Manager.

Boxing Results

Curley Soundly Thrashed.

BUFFALO, Oct. 18.—"Knockout" Brennan came down to 149 pounds ringside for Kid Curley and gave the Kid a sound thrashing, although he managed to stick the ten rounds.

Brannigan and Mahoney Draw.

RACINE, Wis., Oct. 18.—Patsy Brannigan of Pittsburgh and Kid Mahoney of Racine fought ten rounds to a draw here.

Hugo Kelly Beats Foley.

PORTLAND, Me., Oct. 18.—Hugo Kelly led all through six rounds with Pete Foley at the Victoria Theatre.

Soldier Bartfield Wins.

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—In a ten-round bout replete with slugging and cleverness, Soldier Bartfield of Brooklyn bested Mike Farrell at the East New York A. C., Brooklyn.

Veteran Bonner Beaten.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 18.—Jimmy Duffy beat the veteran Jimmy Bonner at the Nonpareil A. C. in six rounds. Duffy's strength and youth proved too much for Bonner.

Jack (Twin) to Box Christie.

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—Jack (Twin) Sullivan of Cambridge, Mass., and Gus Christie of Milwaukee have been matched to box ten rounds at a show to be held at Pond du Lac, Wis., on the night of October 22. The men will weigh in at 154 pounds at 3 p. m.

TIGER HOCKEY CHAMPS TO PLAY 3 GAMES HERE

That peerless array of hockey talent which yearly gives Princeton a seven of championship calibre, will be seen at the Boston Arena for three games during the Christmas holidays. Manager J. H. Boyd has just concluded arrangements with Walter Lougee, the Arena manager, to bring the fast Tigers to town in December for contests with Dartmouth, Boston A. A. and another amateur team, probably the Pilgrims.

The Jungle land combination is the biggest kind of drawing card wherever it plays, especially so in Boston, where capacity houses usually greet the visiting Princetonians. "Hobey" Baker, regarded as the best hockey player of the age, and who is captain of the football eleven, will again be the Princeton rover, with Captain Kuhn at centre.

The Boston Arena throws open its doors on Saturday, November 22, the night of the Harvard-Yale football contest. Walter Lougee, who handled the managerial end of the Arena since its inception, will have the added duties this Fall of being hockey manager. The best college and Canadian teams will appear at frequent intervals on the St. Botolph street ice surface to meet Harvard, Dartmouth, M. I. T., and the amateur organizations, the Boston A. A., the Pilgrims and the Irish American A. A. An afternoon will also be set apart for skating contests between the schoolboys of Greater Boston.

Packy McFarland Outboxes Murphy

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—Packy McFarland of Chicago lived up to his former reputation by giving Tommy Murphy of New York a 10-round lesson in boxing at the Garden A. C. last night. It was a pretty boxing exhibition, but as a fight it was a fizzle. McFarland through sheer good-heartedness permitting Murphy to stay on his feet.

The Chicago boxer simply outclassed Murphy from start to finish. It was such a one-sided bout that it lost all interest for the fans long before the fourth round was reached. At least half of the time Packy slapped Murphy with an open glove and pushed him away with his open hand.

Gilbert Gallant Toys with Chick West

WESTFIELD, Oct. 18.—Chick West was badly beaten by Gilbert Gallant in their bout at the Whip City Athletic Club. The Chelsea boy had numerous chances to put West away, but simply would not accept them.

Rules of Baseball Will Be Rewritten

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—Three magnates from each major league, three managers, three umpires and three sport writers will meet this Winter to rewrite the baseball rules, doing away with a number of absurd contradictions existing in them. When this busy ends its work, baseball on every diamond in the country will be played under the same rules.

Coaches Fear Middies Are Going Too Fast

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 18.—Fearful that the team is going ahead too fast, the Navy coaches are confining the practice of the regulars and principal substitutes to a signal drill and formation practice of moderate length.

Though the team has had but four actual contests with the scrub and two match games this season, it is farther ahead of any team the Academy has ever had at this period of the season, and the coaches are not pleased with the situation.

It is feared that the team will pass its highest point and retrograde before it meets the Army lads, whereas the efforts of the coaches are to bring the team to top form on the day of the game.

As the team has the majority of the players who composed the teams of last year and the year before, it struck its stride almost at once, and the coaches are afraid that it will not be able to maintain it.

McGraw Wants Later Opening Next Season

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—Manager John McGraw of the Giants says he hopes the National League schedule next year will begin later than usual. According to present plans, the magnates are figuring on April 9. McGraw believes that April 16 would be a better date on the ground that the cold weather in April is a handicap to the teams. The Giants will return from their trip around the world on March 1, and will go direct to Marlin, Tex., so that if the championship season begins on April 9 McGraw will have only about three weeks to get his men ready.

MITCHELL'S SIDELIGHTS ON SPORTS

PRESIDENT HERRMANN of the Cincinnati club bobbed up again during the world's series as an advocate of his pet scheme of limiting the seasons of the American and National Leagues to 100 playing days, after which the teams of the two league should play fifty or so games against each other.

But no sooner had Mr. Herrmann begun to push his plan than many important baseball men arose and shoot the scheme right and left. President Lynch of the National League declared that he is unalterably opposed to Mr. Herrmann's plan. He says:

"I am strongly opposed to doing away with the world's series. The plan which is suggested as a substitution would tend to decrease rather than stimulate interest in the national game. The world's series today is the biggest event in American sports, and arouses country-wide interest. There isn't a city, town or hamlet in this country where the series doesn't stir up great excitement. An intercity affair would be so long drawn out that interest would lag and the game would become merely local contests, instead of contests of national importance."

MANAGER MCGRAW is even more strongly opposed to the intercity series. The little Napoleon says:

"The clubs which fight their way through a hard season for the first honors in their respective leagues, settle the championship question in those leagues beyond the shadow of a doubt. All the clubs have a chance for the money in each league. They play twenty-two games with each other, and if that isn't enough to decide which is the best among eight clubs I fail to see what plan could decide it as definitely.

"This intercity series," continues McGraw, "has been the argument for second division clubs for several seasons. You wouldn't hear a protest from any of those clubs if they happened to win a pennant. They love to see the victors get the spoils they justly deserve, and want to declare themselves in on the postseason harvest. There isn't a chance of the world's series being dropped. It is too great an event in baseball. I am not saying this because the Giants have been in the last three world's series, but I would say it, no matter which club in the National League won the pennant. I am strongly opposed to the intercity plan."

THERE are many more influential baseball men against Mr. Herrmann's plan and the feeling so it is doubtful if it is ever adopted; or at least it will be some years before it is.

TWO or three days ago this column commented on the fact that the American League Clubs seem to be stronger than those of the National League. Mr. Herrmann evidently thinks so, too. In an interview after he had returned to Cincinnati, he said:

It's a bitter pill to swallow, but the results of four successive world's series seem to show that the National League is up against it and must do some great hustling if it is to bring its teams up to the standard of the American. Of course you can't tell what might happen in a long race of 154 games, but it is now painfully evident that the American League has the bulge on the National whenever they meet in a short series. They seem to train their teams for speed over a short course, while ours seem to be trained for the long grind.

"Excuse. Well, there are always 'ifs' and 'whys.'

"Had McGraw been luckier in his selection of pitchers, had the Giants all been able to play, had Meyers escaped injury, had the field been dry so that light and active men could run—all these things might have changed the tide, and yet you must see things the other way, too; possibly the same dry field would have made the Mackmen add steals to their hitting, and with a bright sun shining they might have made twice as many hits as they did in the gloom.

"You've got to consider all the angles, but very few of the fans ever do. One thing is dead sure, the Giants didn't seem to have the proper spirit and gamic nerve, while the Athletics surely had. The National League will have to go out and dig up a lot of new stars if it is ever going to break through the barriers and regain the honors that it lost in 1910."

THE members of Connie Mack's team have all told how they intended to invest the money they won on the world's series. Evidently they are all on Easy street, for not one of them mentions anything about paying a few bills.

DARTMOUTH AND WILLIAMS CLASH IN ANNUAL GAME

How the Teams Line Up.

DARTMOUTH		WILLIAMS
Bennett (Capt.)	l.e.	Tyler
McAuliffe	l.t.	Walker
Bent	l.g.	Driscoll
Hollingsworth	c.	Gonsalus
Colby	r.g.	Kline
Nuttrill	r.t.	Parsons
Loudon	r.e.	Vinal (Capt.)
Shaw (Capt.)	q.b.	Hemphill
Ambrose or Whitney	l.h.b.	Foster
Austin	r.h.b.	Jones
Murdock	f.b.	Turner

HANOVER, N. H., Oct. 18.—Dartmouth and Williams met today in their annual clash, each one of the fiercest contests of the year was the result. Williams came to town with a big following, and they confidently expect to carry victory back to Williamstown.

All the regulars were in the lineup except Hitman and Snow. These men's places were taken by Colby and Murdock, who are both players of the first calibre.

Hundreds of alumni arrived in Hanover yesterday afternoon and many more arrived today. Never has such an assemblage gathered in Hanover to witness the annual classic.

Many of the fraternity are holding house parties, making the advent of the game most lively and enjoyable.

Penn Out to Revenge Defeats by Brown

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Oct. 18.—Penn today attempted to get revenge for its two successive defeats by Brown, when it clashed with the Providence Collegians on Franklin Field. Brown, although none too strong, was nevertheless, chock full of confidence. Captain Henry started the game at left end today and Chandler took his place at fullback. Coach Young of Penn was at his old position at left halfback, while Russell was at left guard, both men having sufficiently recovered from their injuries to allow them to play. The entire Red and Blue line-up was the same as at the start of the Swarthmore game last week.

Navy Team to Uncork Many New Open Plays

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 18.—The Navy team was expected to uncork a lot of new open plays against Dickinson today, and the game is being anticipated with unusual interest.

Heretofore this season the midshipmen have relied almost wholly upon their line hitting, but they have been practicing many new plays this week.

The team will be: Ingram, left end; Halston, left tackle; Howe, left guard; Percy, centre; Brown, right guard; Hedman, right tackle; Gilchrist, captain, right end; Vaill, quarterback; Leonard, left halfback; McEleavey, right halfback; Harrison, fullback.

The eleven is in splendid condition, every regular and substitute being available. Vaill has done good work in both matches and in practice, and now has a firm hold on the position of quarterback.

However, Mitchell and Austin are likely to be given trials, while Blodgett, the big halfback, may be tried out further behind the line.

Return of Ostregren Strengthens Purple

WORCESTER, Oct. 18.—Holy Cross team tackled Harvard today with the strongest and fastest lineup in the history of the college. Every player on the Purple team was in the best of condition and expected to defeat Dumbo. The past five days an unusual hard drilling in the principles of the game, and especially in plays to cover these of Harvard.

The line for today's game will be the same as that which tackled the Boston College eleven, with the exception of Ostregren, the former Roxbury high wonder, whose return to left tackle will more than strengthen the outfit. The Roxbury lad has played against the Harvard squad for three years, and is well versed in the forms of plays the Cambridge players use against the Worcester collegians.

The return of Ostregren, who has been on the hospital list since the Yale battle, not only gives much needed strength for today's game to the line, but also gives the Purple followers a real boot artist who can send the pigskin through the uprights from a fair distance on field.

Lehigh Is in Bad Shape for Contest

NEW HAVEN, Oct. 18.—Lehigh is in bad shape for today's game against Yale. In addition to the large crop of injuries already reported, the second string quarterback broke his collarbone late this week and the only halfback left is Bell, so that two sub backs and a third-string quarterback will start the game against the Elis.

Yale Tackles Hard Game in Lehigh

NEW HAVEN, Ct., Oct. 18.—With three regulars missing and an injured man in the lineup, Yale played its first game with Lehigh on Yale Field here today. Avery, Cooney and Cornell were unable to play because of bruises and Marting, the centre, was forced into the tussle with a gash in his forehead.

Yale made an innovation today in placarding with large white shoulder strips the players eligible to receive forward passes. This action is taken as an indication that Yale has developed this play during the secret practice the past week, although it has not been exhibited in the open.

Carlisle Boasts of Champion Players

CARLISLE, Pa., Oct. 18.—Oddly enough, in the person of Charles Bender and James Thorpe, the Carlisle Indian School has the unique distinction of having as its products two members of the rival baseball clubs that fought for the world's championship. One is now being acclaimed as the greatest pitcher in the world, while the other is undoubtedly the world's greatest athlete.

All of Carlisle's stars for the last fifteen years have been trained by Glenn S. Warner. In addition to Thorpe and Bender, Miss Dalenti learned baseball at Carlisle. He is now coaching football at St. Louis University, having played baseball with the St. Louis Americans. LeRoy played league ball after leaving Carlisle, while Johnston, another Carlisle product, pitched for Cincinnati. Frank Jude was with the National League in Cincinnati, but has retired.

Sox and Giants in First Game of Tour

CINCINNATI, O., Oct. 18.—The White Sox ball club, Chicago champions, will meet the New York Nationals here in the first game of a baseball tour around the world.

The Sox players came from Chicago aboard a special train which is to be their home almost continuously until they board the steamer at Vancouver November 20 for Japan.

Manager McGraw and the New York players will also board the special train following today's game and then journey to Chicago where the second game of the tour will be played.

President Comiskey and a large number of rooters accompanied the team here.

Games have been scheduled to take place almost daily before the teams embark on the Pacific coast.

Harvard Expects an Easy Victory Today

Holy Cross' Ends, Captain Metivier and McCabe, Will Bear Close Watching, However.

By SYDE LYNES.

HARVARD meets Holy Cross, the team which held Yale to a 10 to 0 score in the opening game at New Haven some three weeks ago, at 3 o'clock today in the Stadium, and if all goes well, weather conditions not excepted, the Crimson looks forward to a victory without much overtime work. While Holy Cross has a snappy little team and has been getting all kinds of fine points about football from Harry Kersberg, the head coach at Worcester this year and Dave Campbell, both old Harvard stars, the Crimson does not look for any desecration of its goal line by the invaders, and on the other hand expects to come out with a comfortable margin of profit in the scoring way. About four touchdowns should be about right with possible goal from the field by Mahan, although the Crimson is not out this week to be held on its one and one-half inch line.

TWO REGULARS MISSING.

HARVARD enters the contest with only nine-elevenths of a regular team, and one new man in addition, although we count him as one-eleventh. Brickley is still on the wounded list as is also Bradlee, while Cowen will hold down the left guard position. Bertle will take the place of Brickley and bear the brunt of the line bucking, at which he has proved particularly effective during the past week in scrimmage. He is a hard worker on the secondary defence and should be a worthy substitute. Freedley is slated to start the game at quarter, but one can never tell what the executives of the Crimson team may do, in the selection of quarters. Logan will doubtless get a good show during the game, and working both of them now at the helm should have pretty good results, keeping the team on its toes all the time.

GILMAN AT RIGHT TACKLE.

HITCHCOCK, the regular right tackle, has a lame leg and will be given a rest today, Gilman taking his place. The latter is a mighty clever tackle, bequeathed to the varsity from the freshmen eleven last year, and will cause himself to be heard from today. He is very fast in getting through the line on the defence and is frequently down the field with the ends. Cowen will be in at guard for the first time since the opening game, and will have his chance to prove his ability and the run of the field for some time. Cowen is big and fast, but he has a tendency to loaf and until he can shake this, he has a lot of Missourians watching him. The remainder of the team will be in usual order, but a host of substitutions can be expected.

HOLY CROSS HAS FAST LINE.

HOLY CROSS has had a rather veiled season thus far. In the opening game the Worcestertites held Yale to a 10 to 0 score, but this apparently did not mean much, as the Amherst Aggies defeated Holy Cross the following Saturday 6 to 0. Last week Holy Cross had its hands full, defeating Boston College 13 to 0.

The visitors have a pretty fast rushline with a pair of fast, hard working ends, who will give the end runners and catchers of kicks plenty to think of today. Metivier, the captain, is a veteran and works well with Gatergren, another old timer, and trouble may be expected from this side of the invaders' line.

Holy Cross is said to be pretty proficient in many trick plays, and will do its best to stage the Crimson goal line today. The Harvard rushline has strengthened a good deal both offensively and defensively in the past week, and the forwards are getting through and playing for the kicker in better style, and any attempts at place kicks are apt to bounce off Crimson chests.

TURF IN BAD CONDITION.

THE turf on Soldiers' Field is in pretty bad condition, despite the fact that the team was kept out of the Stadium for a couple of days to give it a chance to come back—the grass, not the Stadium. The game with Williams played in a steady downpour loosened the turf up so that even with the brightest, driest kind of a day, the grass would not give very sure footing and with moisture and an unsteady footing the Crimson will be at a decided disadvantage. They will be at a disadvantage in that the speed which the team undoubtedly has cannot be demonstrated, but on the other hand, Harvard's greater weight, although not much more than that of the visitors will tie in the Crimson's favor in the long run.

ROLLINS MAY GET A SHOW.

ROLLINS, a candidate for a back-field position, has been showing up exceptionally well during the past week, as well as in earlier games as a sub and he will doubtless be given an opportunity to show what he can do today. He is a very clever man in shaking off tacklers, and picking his holes in a broken field. Watch him.

Princeton Battles Syracuse Eleven

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 18. — The Princeton eleven faced a much harder team than any of its previous opponents this season when it met Syracuse today. No coaches do not expect a particularly hard contest, however.

Stewart Baker went in to run the Princeton team at the start, but it was almost certain that Emmons would get a chance before the contest is half over. Emmons has been starring consistently in practice this week and Baker's tendency to fumble has made his tenure of the place by no means permanent.

The Tigers' lineup was Hammond, l.e.; Phillips, l.t.; W. Swarr, l.g.; E. Trenkmann, c.; Longstreth, r.g.; Bullis, r.t.; Sloe, r.e.; S. Baker, q.b.; H. Baker, l.h.b.; Glick, r.h.b.; Streit, f.b.

Orients Hope to Beat Indians Today

The Orient football team, New England champions, played the fast Indian eleven from Lowell at Ingleside Park, Winthrop.

The Orients have won six their games so far this season and were in hopes of breaking through this afternoon a winning streak. There is not much known of the Indians around Boston, but in Lowell they have made a fine reputation. The Orients have played three games this season, beating the Roslindale A. A. Illinois A. A. of Norwood and tying the all-star Army and Navy eleven.

Plan Great Reception to "Stuffy" McInnis

GLOUCESTER, Oct. 18.—"Stuffy" McInnis, the star first baseman of the world's champion Athletics, is due for a wonderful reception from his Gloucester followers in token of their appreciation of his great playing. He is expected home next week and will be met at the depot and escorted to the city hall, where a banquet will be held.

HEAR STAHL WILL SUCCEED BILL DAHLEN

Garland (Jake) Stahl, who led the Red Sox to a world's championship a year ago only to be deposed last mid-Summer by President James A. McAleer, is to succeed Bill Dahlen as manager of the Brooklyn team, according to a report today from New York.

"Red Bill" has been provided with a billet in the International League by President Ebbets, so the story goes. He bets controls the champion Newarks, but will not relieve his successful manager, Harry Smith, to make room for Dahlen.

While President Charles H. Ebbets of Brooklyn is firm in his denial of any contemplated change in the management of the Dodgers, those close to the inner circles of the national pastime maintain that Stahl will go to Brooklyn. All American League ties were severed when McAleer handed Jake his unconditional release.

Bill Dahlen is a bosom friend of Stahl. He tried to find an American League berth for him at St. Louis, but Bob Hedges signed Hugh Bradley. Johnson is in no position to prevent Stahl from going to the rival major league

I HAVEN'T wrote a line for any paper, till today,
And I haven't given any oops a glance,
But since you've up and asked me, I am very free to say
That I think I'll win if I get half a chance.
I don't know who will pitch for Uncle, and do not care a dam—
(I trust you'll pardon my profanity.)
But I'll be in there slamming when they need a healthy slam—
Signed

Handsome H. McCormick,
Which is me!

I HAVEN'T seen no figures dealing with me in this muss,
And I haven't been compared to any man,
But I say again, in milder terms, I do not care a cuss;
I'll be waiting in the wings, you understand.
I'll be squatting in the cupboard with "Old Sal," my favorite stick,
And when the umpire bares his sconce and says, says he:
"McCormick bats for Hoozis," I'll be in there with a kick—
Signed

Handsome H. McCormick,
Which is me!

YOU talk about your hitting, and your pitching, and your speed,
You talk about your inside ball, and such,
But the lowdown on this series is the punch in time of need,
And I'm holding back to give it just that touch.
My pants are somewhat shiny from long sitting in the coop,
And my legs are not the legs they used to be—
But I'll be in there pounding when the boys are in the soup—
Signed

Which is me!

YANKEE GIRL LOSES TITLE GOLF TOURNEY

WILMINGTON, Del., Oct. 18. Miss Gladys Ravenscroft of England is now the woman golf champion of the United States. She won the title today by defeating Miss Marion Hollins of New York by 2 up. The match went the full eighteen holes. Miss Ravenscroft is already champion of England and Canada.

The gallery closely followed the players prayed for the success of Miss Hollins, but the spectators had little hope for her success in view of the wonderful golf played by the English girl in the earlier rounds.

Weather conditions were uncertain, and threatening rain but the course was in good condition for the play.

The American girl played great golf at the outset, however, and the battle was by far the most interesting of the entire tournament.

Miss Ravenscroft was one up at the turn.

Cards for the first half follow:

Ravenscroft	5	4	5	4	6	2	5	5	44
Hollins (2)	4	5	4	5	5	3	5	5	46

Six holes in the first nine were halved.

Miss Hollins won the second hole and Miss Ravenscroft captured the third and seventh.

McDermott Lands Western Golf Title

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Oct. 18.—J. J. McDermott of Atlantic City, N. J., twice holder of the national open championship, won the 1913 open championship of the Western Golf Association, with a total of 295 for the 72 holes.

Penn State Will Use Subs Against W. & J.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 18.—Penn State will use several substitutes in the game against Washington and Jefferson here today in order to have the first string men for the stronger games on the schedule later in the season.

Larry McLean Got $500 as His Share

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—Larry McLean, who caught for the Giants in four games of the world's series and also made six hits, on the return trip to the plate in the smallest man in Harlem. It appears that last Tuesday night, after the Giants received their share of the world's series money, they held a meeting to apportion the players' shares.

In view of the fact that McLean, who joined the team in mid-Summer, had been called upon to do the heavy work behind the bat after Meyers had been injured just before the second game, the players voted to make up a purse of $500 for Long Larry, who had been led to believe that because of his valuable services he would receive a full share, about $2,200. That is why Larry is angry.

Exeter in Hard Game with Yale Freshmen

NEW HAVEN, Oct. 18. — Exeter's lineup against Yale, 1917, here today, will be: Comerford or Kelly, l.e.; McGrath, l.t.; Holton, l.g.; Hutchinson, c.; Neal, r.g.; Black, r.t.; Lowe, r.e.; Kempton or McDonough, q.b.; Hingsmith, l.h.b.; Carey, r.h.b., and Kneeright or Quigley, f.b.

Others who came with the squad as substitutes were Smith, Church, Campbell, Kirkpatrick is out with a bad knee, and also Scott and Lake, while Laird is suffering with an injury. H. Church, F. E. Wells and W. Easton, former Exeter players, will be with the Yale freshmen this year.

Barry's Infield Mates at His Celebration

WORCESTER, Oct. 18.—Manager Connie Mack of the champion Athletics and Frank Baker, Eddie Collins and "Stuffy" McInnis, members of his $100,000 infield, have been sent invitations by the general committee in charge of the reception to Jack Barry, shortstop of the Philadelphia team, who will be held at the Bancroft Hotel, Monday, November 3.

Wesleyan Anxious to Repeat Over Union

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Oct. 18.—After spending over night in Albany, the Wesleyan football squad, numbering eighteen, came here today for its annual game with Union. Last year Wesleyan defeated Union 28 to 3 in Middletown and a victory is looked for again this year.

The Wesleyan lineup will about the same as in the Tufts game, although Doebler, quarterback, may alternate with Capt. Hastie at that position. Cox will not play at tackle owing to injuries received in the Tufts game, although Hastie will shift from guard and Gordon put in his place.

Expect Dooin Will Again Lead Phillies

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 18.—Plans to reorganize the Phillies are now under way, and early next week it is expected that things will be in such shape that the club can begin getting ready for the 1914 season. Since the death of William H. Locke, the president of the club, two months ago, Mr. Baker has been acting as the head of the club. It is reported that the directors will call a meeting of the club when the directors meeting is held next Monday.

It is expected that the first action taken after the reorganization will be to tender a contract to Charlie Dooin to manage the team next season.

Dooin's two-year contract as manager ran out a few weeks ago. He said he day he believed things will so shape themselves that he will again have command of the team in 1914.

Name Officials to Handle Big Games

The officials who will handle all the big games in the Intercollegiate football world have just been announced. The list is herewith appended:

Dartmouth vs. Princeton, Oct. 25.—Referee, W. G. Crowell, Swarthmore; umpire, Neil Snow, Michigan; linesman, Lloyd H. M. Nolly Weed, Yale.

Harvard vs. Cornell, Nov. 1.—Referee, W. S. Langford, Trinity; umpire, D. Fultz, Brown; linesman, J. H. Poolleton, Bowdoin.

Pennsylvania vs. Dartmouth, Nov. 8.—Referee, N. A. Tufts, Haverford; umpire, W. G. Crowell, Swarthmore; linesman, F. Murphy, Yale.

Yale vs. Princeton, Nov. 15.—Referee, W. S. Langford, Trinity; umpire, Neil Snow, Michigan; linesman, D. Fultz, Brown.

Harvard vs. Yale, Nov. 22.—Referee, W. S. Langford, Trinity; umpire, Neil Snow, Michigan; linesman, D. Fultz, Brown.

Pennsylvania vs. Cornell, Nov. 27. — Referee, W. S. Langford, Trinity; umpire, Neil Snow, Michigan; linesman, Carl Marshall, Harvard.

The Tufts eleven and the University of Maine this afternoon on the oval in Medford in their annual battle.

The men from Maine outweighed their opponents about ten pounds to the man, but what Tufts lacked in weight it made up in speed.

Tufts went into the game more or less crippled because of minor injuries. O'Donnell, the big left tackle, is suffering from a strained shoulder, while Stanhope is still limping because of a sprained ankle. Volk started the game at left halfback instead of Hadley, who is still on the hospital list.

THE AMERICAN'S HOME PAGE

The Amazing Minaret

Fully Described by Olivette

Here is a tunic skirt that can be made to fit the pocket-book as well as the wearer if the directions given by Olivette are followed out. The model is one that has just arrived from Paris, and sent exclusively to this page.

TUNICS, lamp-shade draperies and minaret skirts seem to be the order of the day in skirtdom.

The tunic skirt is the chief feature of this gown of bois de rose satin. The tunic is of Roman striped satin, in rose, corbeau blue, taupe and white. I would most earnestly advise all but the very tall, slender woman to have her tunic of the same rose satin that makes the gown.

The line of stripes running around the figure will do much to increase and accentuate its size.

The tunic, which may be edged with marten or mink, is rather long on the left hip, where it lengthens at the back until it disappears under the long sash ends of the same colored satin, which hang from the girdle at the left of the back.

The kimono bodice is veiled by silver gray silk muslin. It is draped at its surplice, crossing and edged at the neck and at the end of the sleeve by a band of the striped material by fur or simply by a bias fold of the satin. At the throat there is a fichu of lace which fastens in a tiny sailor's knot at the middle front. For the lace he may choose a soft ecru in a fine and filmy weave. There are angel cuffs of lace.

The skirt gathers slightly beneath the tunic and is about an inch from the floor all around. There is a wide band-made hem at the bottom.

This is always a pretty finish for any soft material.

Women's Use of the Ballot

From EDWIN MARKHAM

MISS JESSIE ACKERMANN, who has traveled eight times around the globe, has put into a twenty-five-cent pamphlet a keenly interesting report of the effects of woman suffrage in the various countries of the world where it has been granted operation. The booklet is called "What Women Have Done with the Vote." From the chapter dealing with Australia I pick out a few thoughtful extracts:

"After six weeks in the East End of London, where I earned my living as organ grinder, costermonger, selling flowers, newspapers and hawking at Ludgate Hill, my experience increased my conviction that there are conditions in the social order of our day which will never be removed until the women of the country wherein the evils exist have the power to help put them down.

"It was generally predicted, in reference to the ballot in the hands of Australian women, that it would be merely a matter of doubling the vote on each side, and therefore would have little effect upon politics generally.

"The women electors are divided into two classes; those who want the vote and use it and those who regard citizenship as a joke—and a very unpleasant one at that. Of the latter, they and their children are well provided for; the pangs of poverty, the grind of never-ending toil and the battle of simply keeping alive and staying on earth are all strange to them. Without any knowledge of the laws that govern women and children, they are quite certain they have all that is to be desired by way of legislation.

"In Australia the party spirit is as fierce and bitter that women labor under very great disadvantages in exercising the vote.

"It is perfectly true that 470,000 women did not vote at the last Federal election; but there was also a great number of men who abused the privilege—something more than half a million. As there are 111 men to every 100 women, one may understand what the comparison of those figures means.

"The moment woman is dragged without asking for it (in Australia from political seclusion the world expects her overnight to remedy the results of centuries of bad legislation. Well, it will never be done!

"Men have grown into enacting wise legislation, where such a thing is found, and women will do the very same; therefore, men and women being more or less alike in some respects, no one need look for revolutionized affairs in the twinkling of an eye."

"CASCARETS" FOR LIVER-HEADACHE

You're bilious and constipated—Clean up inside and feel bully.

Get a 10-cent box now.

You're bilious! You have a throbbing sensation in your head, a bad taste in your mouth, your eyes burn, your skin is yellow, with dark rings under your eyes, your lips are parched. No wonder you feel ugly, mean and ill-tempered. Your system is full of bile not properly passed off, and what you need is cleaning up inside. Don't continue being a bilious nuisance to yourself and those who love you, and don't resort to harsh, physic that irritate and injure. Remember that most disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels are cured by morning with gentle thorough Cascarets—they work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from your druggist will keep your liver and bowels clean; stomach sweet, and your head clear for months. Children love to take Cascarets, because they taste good and never gripe or sicken.

THE KING OF DIAMONDS

BY LOUIS TRACY

A THRILLING STORY OF A MODERN COUNTE CRISTO

TODAY'S INSTALMENT

Copyright, 1901, by Edward J. Clode

NOW, the chance one of that lan dinge, no less than his perfect accent, went a long way toward reconciling the manager's suspicions. A boy who was so well educated must be quite out of the common. Perhaps some scientific parent or guardian encouraged him to act independently thus early in life. He might be the son of a rich man residing in London for a special course of study. The name, Anson, was an aristocratic one. But his clothes—they were odd. Good enough, but not the right thing.

"Will you oblige me by recommending a good tailor," said Philip. "I need a complete outfit of wearing apparel, and it will save me a lot of trouble if some body will tell me exactly what to buy and where to buy it."

His uncanny trick of thought reading disconcerted the manager greatly. Undoubtedly the boy was a puzzle. Never had this experienced man of the world met anyone more self-possessed, more direct and yet, with it all, exceedingly polite.

"I take it that you want the best?" he inquired pleasantly.

"Yes."

"Are you lunching in the hotel?"

"I would like something sent here, if you please, and, there again, your advice will be most gratefully accepted."

The manager felt that a generation was growing up of which he knew nothing, but he simply answered:

"I will see to it. Do you—er—take wine?"

Philip laughed, that pleasant whole-souled laugh of his which instantly secured him friends.

"Not yet, Monsieur."

"Foret is my name."

"Well, Monsieur Foret, I am far too young as yet for either wine or tobacco. I promised my mother I would touch neither until I am twenty-one, and I will keep my word. I think I would like some cafe au lait."

WORKING WONDERS

"I understand. Your dejeuner will be sent up in ten minutes. By the time you have finished I will have people here from two or three establishments who will meet all your requirements in the shape of clothes and the rest."

An hour's talk and the payment of checks on account worked wonders. Before many days had passed Philip was amply provided with raiment. His presence in the hotel, too, attracted no comment whatever. People who saw him coming or going instantly assumed that he was staying with his people, while the managers took care that gossip among the employes was promptly stopped.

As for the ragged youth with the diamonds, he was forgotten, apparently. The newspapers dropped him, believing, indeed, that Isaacstein had worked some ingenious advertising dodge on his own account, and Messrs. Sharpe & Smith never dreamed of looking for the Hon Phillip Anson, the derelict from Johnson's Mews, in the Pall Mall Hotel, the most luxurious and expensive establishment in London.

That afternoon, Philip visited the Safe Deposit Company. He had little difficulty, of course, in securing a small strong room. He encountered the wonted surprise at his youth, but the excellent argument of a banking account and the payment of a year's rent in advance soon cleared the air.

He transferred four of his portmanteaus to this secure environment—the fifth was sent to his hotel. When the light faded, he drove to the East End, and made a round of pawnbrokers' shops. Although some of the tickets were time-expired, he recovered nearly all his mother's belongings, excepting her watch.

The odd coincidence recalled the inspector's implied promise that he should receive one as a recognition of his gallantry.

How remote, now far removed from each other, the main events in his life seemed to be at this eventful epoch. As he went westward in a hansom, he could hardly bring himself to believe that barely twenty-four hours had elapsed since he traveled to the Mile End road in company with Mrs. Wrigley.

And the curious thing was that he felt in no sense awed by the possession of thousands of pounds and the tenancy of palatial chambers in a great hotel. His career had been too checkered, its recent developments too stupendous, to cause him any undue emotion. Existence, for the hour, was a species of well-ordered dream, in which imagination was untrammeled save by the need to exercise his wits in order to keep the phantasy within the bounds, not of his own brain, but of other men's.

At the hotel he found the French valet setting forth a shirt. The man explained that he required a spare set of studs and links.

This reminded Philip that there was still a good deal of shopping to be done. He was about to leave the room for the purpose, when the valet said:

"Another portmanteau has arrived for monsieur. Will you be pleased to unlock it?"

"No," said Philip. "It must remain unlocked." He smiled at the thought of the sensation his tattered rags and worn boots would make in that place. Yet, just a week ago, he passed through the street outside, bound in the pitiless rain for Johnson's Mews, and bent on suicide.

MORE SHOPPING

He walked into Regent street and made a number of purchases, not forgetting some books. A double silver-mounted photograph stand caught his eye. It would hold the two best pictures he possessed of his father and mother, so he bought it. He also acquired a dispatch box in which he could store his valuables, both jewelry and documents, for he had quite a number of letters, receipts, letters and other things to safeguard now, and he did not wish servants' prying eyes to examine everything belonging to him.

When alone in his room he secured the album and locked that special portmanteau again, after stowing therein the letters found beneath Mrs. Anson's pillow. Soon his mother's dear face smiled at him from a beautiful border of filigree silver. The slight was pleasant to him, soothing to his full mind. In her eyes was a message of faith, of trust, of absolute confidence in the future.

It was strange that he thought so little of his father at this time, but the truth was that his childhood was passed so much in his mother's company, and they were so inseparable during the last two years, that memories of his father were shadowy.

Yet the physiognomist would have seen that the boy owed a great deal of his strength of character and well-knit frame to the handsome, stalwart man whose name he bore.

Philip loved his mother on the compensating principle that persons of opposite nature often have an overpowering affinity for each other. He resembled her neither in features nor in the more subtle traits of character.

After a dinner, the excellence of which was in nowise diminished by lack of appreciation on his part, he undertook a pilgrimage of curiosity to which he had previously determined to devote the evening.

He wondered unceasingly to whom he was indebted for the good meals he had enjoyed in prison. Now he would endeavor to find out.

A hansom took him to Holloway, but the first efforts of the driver failed to discover the whereabouts of the "Royal Star Hotel."

At last Philip recollected the warder's added direction—"opposite."

He dismissed the cab and walked to the prison entrance. Directly in front he saw a small restaurant called the "Star." Its titular embellishments were due to the warder's gift of humor.

He entered. A woman was knitting at a cash desk.

"Until yesterday," he said, "you sent food regularly to a boy named Anson, who was confined in the prison"——

"Yes," interrupted the lady. "I only heard this mornin' that he was let out."

"Would you mind telling me who paid the bill? I suppose it was paid?"

"Well, as a matter of fact, it was overpaid," was the reply. "You see, the pore lad was remanded for a week, an' Mr. Judd, a man 'e lives in the Farringdon road, kem 'ere an' arranged for 'is week's board. Have yo heard wot happened to 'im?"

Philip's heart was in his mouth, but he managed to answer that the boy was all right; there was no charge against him. Then he escaped into the street. The one man he had forgotten was his greengrocer friend, who had indeed acted the part of the Good Samaritan.

To Be Continued Monday.

Bar Capsicum in Ginger Ale, Says Cassidy

Mr. Cassidy told you yesterday of some of the requests the National Manufacturers of Soda Water Flavors and Bottlers are asking from the pure food authorities. Yesterday he told of the necessity of the consumer being allowed to see the label declaring what soda water flavor actually contains. Today he discusses the question of using capsicum in ginger ale instead of the true ginger.

By HARRY P. CASSIDY.

The soda water flavor makers are asking the federal pure food authorities to create a standard for ginger ale and ginger soda water flavor.

Here is what they made for a standard and asked the government to sanction:

That the term "ginger ale soda water flavor" shall be held to be proper and sufficient as applied to a water soluble compound, the predominating flavor of which is derived from ginger, with other aromatics, with or without caramel color.

Ginger ale is a carbonated beverage made from a syrup flavored with ginger ale soda water flavor, containing caramel as a color and acidulated, and with or without foam.

In the first place capsicum, or cayenne pepper or red pepper or by any other name, was never intended to be used in the manufacture of ginger ale. It is put there because it is cheaper to use than ginger root.

And because it is a cheaper substitute it is found and a swindle on the public when used instead of ginger root in ginger ale.

I know the soda water flavor makers will not like that statement. But common sense will tell the consumer there is no need of using red pepper in soda water flavor supposed to be made of ginger.

Some of the Alibis.

The soda water makers do not have to use it. They offer more alibis for its use than the New York Giants gave for their recent defeat. Here are some of their chief alibis:

We must use capsicum because ginger root beclouds ginger ale.

Without capsicum, ginger ale loses its pungent, biting taste.

We can't get a sufficiently strong ginger extract.

Here's the real story why capsicum is used. It costs more money to buy real ginger. It means more labor and expense to the maker.

Ginger ale can also be made without the use of capsicum. It is being made today by makers of the best ginger ales on the market. Mr. Wentworth of the Granite State Bottling Company of Atkinson Depot, New Hampshire, makes a splendid ginger ale which contains no capsicum.

He is willing to put time, effort and money into his ginger ale. And he gets his ginger from the best Indian ginger. It costs more than capsicum. Mr. Wentworth doesn't believe in selling red pepper and carbonated water and calling it ginger ale.

The soda water flavor makers tell the government the standard shall be applied to a water soluble compound, the predominating flavor of which is derived from ginger. OH OTHER AROMATICS."

With other aromatics. What do the soda water makers mean by that phrase? Do they mean allspice, black pepper, cayenne, nutmeg oil and any other article which a dishonest maker might use to deceive?

Two of the best known foreign brands of ginger ale get by the government laws at the port of entry by carring the word "aromatic" on the label. Both these brands are made with hot, pungent substitutes for the real ginger.

Claims Use a Fraud.

I am not contending that capsicum as a substitute for ginger in ginger ale is harmful. I am claiming, however, that the use of capsicum for ginger is a fraud and a cheat. Reputable manufacturers do not use it. It's only a profit maker and is used only when the maker wants to save more money or is too slovenly in his methods of manufacture to make a pure ginger ale.

It is more difficult to prepare ginger extract which will be strong enough to impart a ginger ale taste and at the same time keep the drink clear and brilliant.

But it can be done by using ginger extract and is said above is being done by several bottlers.

Let me quote from the verbatim report of the hearing as reported by the bottlers' trade paper, the National Bottlers' Gazette:

DR. MITCHELL of the Department of Agriculture—I notice in reports of previous hearings that one "manufacturer, who is present today, uses no capsicum in his ginger ale.

DR. HALLOCK—While I was with Schultz in New York, he made ginger ale without capsicum. We didn't regard it necessarily as an ingredient of ginger ale.

DR. ALSBERG, chief of Federal Bureau of Chemistry—You are still selling such a product?

DR. HALLOCK—Yes, It does not contain any capsicum. I am manufacturing the product myself and it does not contain any capsicum.

Dr. Alsberg hit the ball on the head when he said to the soda water flavor men, "First you make your definition of flavor and then say it (soda water) is flavored with that flavor."

I hope Dr. Alsberg and his conferees will make a ruling barring capsicum from ginger ale as a substitute for ginger. It doesn't belong there. It is an adulterant, whether harmless or not is not the point. The user of an adulterant is foisting a fraud and a cheat on the public.

Physician Tells How To Grow Hair

A Well-Known Physician and Newspaper Correspondent Tells How to Promote the Growth of the Hair.

A well-known physician who has made a careful study of the hair recently made the following statement: "It is comparatively easy to stop the hair from falling out, promote its growth and banish dandruff by the following simple recipe, which can be made at home: To 7 oz. of water add a small box of Barbo Compound, 1 oz. of bay rum and ¾ oz. of glycerine. Apply it to the scalp with the finger tips two or three times per week. It not only is excellent as a scalp and hair tonic but it darkens faded, streaked, gray hair and makes it soft and glossy. I use it myself and have no hesitancy in recommending it to my patients. These ingredients can be bought at any drug store at very little cost." Adv.

Little Bobbie's Pa

Pa had a argument last nite with the richest man in the town were we are stopping. All on the peepol in the town, nearly, is afrade of the rich man, but Pa isent afrade of him bekawss we know sum peepol in the cities that maiks more in a year than all this rich man is worth. The argument Pa had with the rich man was about the opportunities for a yung man to beecum rich.

The rich man was at our hotel, & he was talking with Pa & never we going to colleges. Pa thot that after I had went thru the pohlick school he wod send me to college, & the rich man sed No, that end throw me among lezy boys & I wuddent never amount to anything.

I dosnt think so, sed Pa. I think it all depends on the boy anyhow. Of course, sed Pa, if never went to a college myself, but I think I shall send Bobbie. He will be glad for it in later years, the saim as I am sorry I didnt git a chanst to go.

All that is necessary to succes is hard work & plenty of sleep, sed the rich man. I never went to a college, but went rite to work wen my father left me the general store. I always was in bed at nine o'clock at nite & out at 6 in the morning. Little by littel I accumulated my munny. If never took a drink of anything intoxicating. I never smoted & I never sworn. I always went to church, & gaiv as much as any man in our village. That is the seekret of Success. Go to bed at nine, first of all.

I dosnt follow you, sed Pa. I know a little sleep is a grate thing. But there has been many a bette thought thought after 9 o'clock at nite, & many a big deal has been put over the plate around midnite. I dosnt think Napolyun wud have been much of a general if he had went to bed every nite at nine. Lincoln dident go to bed every nite at nine, neither, sed Pa, cevery wen he was a boy. He used to stay awake till erly in the morning, sumtimes, reading books that he had borrowed.

I dosnt care what Lincoln did, sed the rich man, I always went to bed at nine. Lincoln dident have much money when he died.

Neither did Julius Caesar, sed Pa. He left most of his munny to the poor. Most of the grate minds in history was minds that dident care much for munny, sed Pa.

However, I point with pride to my success, sed the rich man. None of the other boys that went to school with me is a mr worth.

Probly they dident have any general store left to them, sed Pa. There is a good deal of luck about a man making his life successful. The only men that will not admit that luck is a fackter is the men that had all the luck themselves.

Another thing, sed Pa, it always gives me a pain to hear a successful man talking about hard work and sobriety & long sleeps. Think of the thousands of wood choppers, Pa sed, that go to bed at nine & git up at five all thare life long. They work hard, vary hard & they are sober bekaus they can't get anything to drink out in the woods, but woodchoppers they die and woodchoppers they die. There is many a husky felling maple & beech tree, Pa sed, & piling them into cords, but wod have been a pillar of the church if he had had a general store left to him.

Do you think there is such a thing as luck? sed the rich man.

Sure I do, sed Pa, look at my wife & littel son.

Household Hints

When a splinter gets under a finger-nail it is often very hard to draw out. In such a case, if a cold water bandage is put round the top of the finger and then kept wet and cold it will in time push draw out splinter and keep finger from festering.

To clean the inside of a silver teapot, mix together equal quantities of soda, vinegar and flour. Paste this around the inside of the pot and let it stand overnight. It will make the inside as bright as possible with very little trouble.

When cooking kippers, place them on a dish with a piece of butter on each; cover and bake in a fairly hot oven for ten minutes. This method preserves the juice and the flavor of the fish better than frying.

When cleaning stone steps and hearths use the white hearthstone or red cobler with this starch instead of water. This saves it to the stone, and it will not be washed off so quickly with rain or be trodden off.

Not only is powdered oatmeal good for the complexion, but a little of it thrown into the water in which the face and hands are bathed has a softening and whitening effect.

Sprinkle a few tablespoonfuls of salt over the kitchen fire after it is made up, and it will keep going for hours without requiring any attention.

A piece of starch placed in the water will keep flowers fresh for quite a long period.

Wring chamois out of soapy water without rinsing. When it dries it is soft and serviceable, instead of stiff.

A troublesome corn can be eased by a poultice composed of a thin slice of lemon worn over it during the day.

What Is It the Cowards Fear?

By WINIFRED BLACK

JUPITER is throwing off a new world, they say. I wonder who's on it? If you could have the say, what would you do about that world?

What would you keep off it—of all the human quantities and all the human failings and all the human vices, which would you banish from the new world—if you could?

I believe I'd take cowardice, if I could only choose one.

Cowardice is at the bottom of so much that is wrong and foolish and cruel, so much that is terrible in this world of ours. I'd shut all the cowards out of the New Jupiter if I had my way.

It's the coward who commits nearly all the murders. He's afraid some one will kill him, so he shoots first. He saw the other man put his hand toward his pocket, so he grabbed his knife.

He had heard that the other man was looking for him, so he didn't wait for him to find him.

He is too cowardly to ask a man for a job and stick to it, so he kills somebody for money, or he's too cowardly to deny himself luxuries he cannot earn, so he puts poison in the cup of his benefactor.

I've seen many murderers, and I never saw one who was not at heart a coward, and who did not show it in every line of his weakling face.

All the poor women who are left to fight for a living for themselves and their babies are left so by cowards—men who cannot face the cold or who are afraid of the sun or who fear to undertake any responsible work at all. So they run away and let their wives face the cold and the heat and the worry alone. Poor cowards, I wonder if they can help it, really?

It is the cowardly girl who goes wrong. She is afraid of displeasing some one if she doesn't do as the "rest" do. So she does as the "rest" do and ends as they do, poor thing—some day —in the poorhouse or at the county hospital.

The young assistant who trundles the dead wagon to her room to get her poor, heroic body, is he a coward too? If he's keeping his place by sneaking tricks and by sycophantic flattery instead of by honest work, he is. He won't keep it long. They never do, the cowards; their hands are too weak and trembling to hold any job for any length of time.

Who's the man who succeeded from your village? The cleverest one among them, the best looking, the one with the most money, the one with the quickest brain, the one with the most dogged industry?

I four not. To me it is always the brave who seem to win. The red-headed boy who couldn't add to save his life, and who never had a square meal till he went out and earned one, is the one who "made good" from my town.

He was always a fighter. Not quarrelsome or bullying. He'd do anything in reason for a little boy, and all the girls used to beg him to pull their sleds for them. But one day somebody said something about his mother and he whipped three boys in succession, and asked how many more wanted a taste of the same medicine.

No coward, that boy. And one of the boys gave him a good, hard beating, too, but he wouldn't give up—hung on till the other boy's patience gave out and he won.

That's the way he did when he went to town. He hung on. He wouldn't give up, and so he won.

He's head of a big concern now and the leading man in his city. He won it by courage—nothing on earth but sheer, bulldog courage. His cousin from the same town, was cleverer than he, quicker, had more money, a better education, but he was a coward. He's a clerk working for Redhead now and grumbling at the long hours he has to keep.

Deceit, trickery, fraud—knavery of all sorts—look closely at them all, and always in the back of them stands some skulking coward. That's where he belongs and where he will stay—in the background—poor coward.

A woman escaped from a "sanitarium" the other day. She was sane and well but her relatives wanted her money, so they shut her up, and when she brought suit for false imprisonment it turned out that half the village where she lived knew that she was a good woman being cruelly wronged. And not one of them would protest—why? Cowards every one of them—shaking, trembling cowards—afraid somebody would be offended. One man said his cousin was a doctor at the sanitarium and, of course, he—

And one said that his wife's sister married the superintendent's brother and so, of course—

And they weren't in the least ashamed of themselves, didn't seem to know or even suspect what it was that they were confessing. Count up the gang of thieves and malefactors you can find and they'll be cowards—all doing what some stronger man than they tells them to do for fear—of what, I wonder?

What is it the cowards fear?

I saw a man run over by a street car the other day. It was plainly and clearly the fault of the motorman. The conductor went through the car asking people to give their names as witnesses and only one person on a crowded car gave a name and address. One said "You can't get me into this." And another grinned and said, "Not me." "Nor me," said a third.

And they went home feeling apparently very proud that they had been so clever as to "keep out of trouble" and let a poor man's case against the company go for want of witnesses.

What did they fear, I wonder? Who was it they stood in dread of?

"I know that man was stealing from his poor partner for years. I often thought I'd tell John about it, he's such a good friend of mine; but I thought I'd better not."

So the "good friend" stood by and saw poor, good John robbed, for fear—of what?

Keep the cowards off the new world, please, Mr. Jupiter, and see what a joyous place of abode it will be.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

NO.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Last night I went out with a girl friend and we met some boys whom we knew. While going along the street talking, two other boys came along. Because we had not had an introduction to them we did not talk to them. One asked me if I had lost my tongue. Now where I came from that is considered an awful insult. I slapped him unintentionally and we walked away. Should I apologize?

WORRIED.

You were right in not speaking to them without an introduction, but did wrong in resenting a silly boy's silliest remark in such a way.

You did wrong, not to him, but to yourself. You owe him no apology, but you owe to yourself a resolution to be more dignified. You should have paid no attention to him.

THAT DEPENDS ON THE GIRL.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man of twenty-four, and have been keeping steady company with a girl whom I have known two years. I am solely dependent on a salary, which is $90 per month, and have no bank account. Will you kindly tell me how much it would cost to furnish a flat of four rooms moderately and also if two of ordinary and economical habits could get along on $90.

R. A. B.

THERE are girls who could furnish an apartment of four rooms with a hundred-dollar bill and have money left, and other girls who couldn't do it on $200. It all depends on the shopping instincts of the girl.

Ninety a month is not much, with rent to be met, but it is possible to live on it. This also depends on the girl. She may be orderly and economical, but does she know how to buy?

TRY HAVING FAITH.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am eighteen and deeply in love with a young man of nineteen, who I know loves me. We have been very great sweethearts for the last two and a half years. During that time he has always been bringing every cent of his salary to his mother. Many a time I have asked him what he was going to do when matters get serious with us, and he tells me when the time comes his mother will give him all he needs. He tells me he expects that to be three or four years from now. Being that we are not engaged yet, my mother thinks that we ought not to go out together until we are. Let me know what I am going to do to have him make himself less of his own salary, so as to make him begin to make things serious so we can at least be engaged.

P. S. K.

HIS money in his mother's hands is safer than in his own, if he is like most young men.

Have a little more faith. He is saving for the future, and you are both so young the waiting should not prove hard. Don't limit yourself to his attentions; occasionally go out with other boys. This will hasten the arrival of love surer than criticism or argument.

The Dissatisfied Wife

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

"MY husband says I am extravagant. He quarrels with me all the time about the bills. Now I suppose I could save a few dimes a week if I stayed right in the kitchen day and night, and went to market myself and pinched every nickel till the wreath shrivelled; but do you think a man has any right to ask a woman to sacrifice her whole life like that—just to save a few dollars a month? I don't. I think I'm worth more to the world as I am than I would be as a cook slaving my life out over pots and pans.

"I am nothing but a servant, a housekeeper. I thought he loved me. I don't believe he ever did at all, or he wouldn't say such things to me.

"What shall I do to make him see things in the right light?

"Things in the right light, eh? Well, little Mrs. Importance, how do you know that you see them in that light yourself?

"Worth more to the world!" When on earth did you get that phrase and who taught you to parrot it to poor husband till he doesn't know which way to turn? "Worth more to the world!" What do you amount to, that you are so very valuable to the world, anyhow?

What can you do to make the world a better place to live in? Do a little art needle work, make weird plaster casts of things that never lived on sea or land?

Play two or three "classic pieces" on the piano? Curl up on a couch and read "deep" books all about the decision man and the poor, soul-broken victim of his perfidy? What in it play you owe the world, anyhow, and has the world shown any great anxiety to collect the debt?

Are prominent citizens grovelling in the dirt at your door, begging you to let the dishes go and come and show the world the truth and the light? "Truth for the world!" What do you know by the world, anyhow? Some little circle of mutual admirers who have made themselves believe that they are the core of the universe, only people don't see it.

Some group of "bohemians" (save the mark!) who never earned an honest dollar in their puling, grubbing, grasping lives?

Some little group of school ma'ams somewhere in some cobwebby corner?

Wake up, wake up, little woman—your husband is your world just now! Yes chase him—and said you'd stick to him and help him and make life pleasant for him. Are you doing that by running all over town listening to vague lectures, or whichever of the other things that drudge to get a good table and keep bills down these days.

Why, the biggest man in the world and working over the problem of the high cost of living. How did you ever get the idea that it wasn't worth your attention?

Study your husband, study your markets, study your bills, make a business of it—a wholesome, clever, wide-awake, honest business—and you'll be doing more for the "world" than all the lecturers who ever theorized on all the platforms.

Set a fashion in your "world," a fashion of practical common sense and real devotion, a fashion of competence and joyous unselfishness. Make that husband of yours the happiest man in Messopotamia. Make your little flat the gayest, cheeriest nest in this city, and then do your "moulding" all you want to—read, study, see, look, learn, love, sympathize, help, laugh.

Be a woman first and a problem afterwards, and watch your famous world rally around you, be it never will while you chase shadows and try to sweep cobwebs off the sky with your funny little whiskbroom.

Their Married Life

Helen Breaks in the New Maid, but Warren Finds Fault with the Dinner

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

HELEN kept standing at the dining room clock as she cleared off the breakfast dishes. It was quarter after nine now, and that girl had promised so faithfully to come at nine.

What if she should disappoint her after all. Helen had a discouraging vision of another day's hunt for a maid. Hue as she had up the table cloth the bell rang. It was Nora with a suit case and bundle.

"Good morning. I was beginning to think you weren't coming."

"Oh, no, miss. I wouldn't disappoint you. When I says I'll come, I'll come," standing awkwardly in the hall with her packages.

"Well, you can go right to your room and put on your working dress," and Helen led the way to the small, but cheerful, maid's room.

A few minutes later Nora came into the kitchen to a fresh blue gingham dress and white apron.

"Now, Nora, we'll just leave the dishes, and I'll show you how to do the front rooms."

Helen opened the broom closet and took out the carpet sweeper, brooms and dust cloths.

"Now you'll begin in the library."

With painstaking details she showed Nora how first to rub the sweeper over the rugs, then turn them up and go over the hard wood floors with the long handled brush, and then with the small dust brush and dustpan.

"You see, Nora, if you go over the floors this way every morning you'll only have to get down on your knees and an inch with a cloth once a month. That's one thing I'm particular about. I DO want the floors kept well.

"Must I move everything, Miss?" glancing doubtfully at the bookcase.

"Oh, no, you need never move that. Look, you can get under it with the brush. Don't forget the windows," throwing one up. "You must never clean without opening all the windows."

That the carpet work, and work fast, Nora soon demonstrated. Helen had thought yesterday that she mowed rapidly, and now she was quite sure of it. And she was so cheerful-looking, and seemed so glad to be there.

When she had finished the front room and the library Helen called her into the bedroom.

"Now I want to show you about the bed. This is Wednesday, so we put on fresh linen. I will get the linen in this closet. We change the bed every Wednesday and Saturday. The early morning while we are at breakfast you must put the bed to air, take off all the clothes and lay them on the chair by the window. And every other day you turn the mattress. Don't always turn it the same way, one time from the head to the foot and the next time over sideways. Now you stand on that side and I'll help you make it up this morning.

"Yes, always tuck the blanket well in at the bottom. Mr. Curtis particularly dislikes to have the bedclothes pull up from the foot. There! No we don't put the pillows up, just lay them down flat—like that. We don't have china in this room, clean pillow cases look better than any shams.

"Will I answer it, Miss?" as a bell from the kitchen rang shrilly.

"That's the dumbwaiter. I guess that's the ice. Wait, I'll show you how to put it in."

While Nora lifted the ice from its dumbwaiter Helen pushed back the milk bottles and made room for it in the refrigerator.

"This ice box ought to be cleaned, but we won't have time for it today. Now, Nora, you can go back and finish up the bedroom."

Helen was straightening up her own room when a little later Nora came to the door.

"I'm all done in the bedroom, Miss. Must I do the dishes now?"

"Yes, you can wash them next. Leave out the cut glass and silver, and the best dishes were still piled in the table.

"Now, this is the solid silver. You can tell it by the pattern, a pine is engraved. As soon as you wash it I want you always to put it in the cabinet drawer in the dining room and I'll show you.

Helen opened the felt lined drawers and took a fat from the knife.

"This is the fish carver we keep one for. I'll tell you about that later. The table knives, forks and teaspoons are the same pattern one used everyday in the family like this. And each have are the dessert knives and forks, the soup, bouillon and after spoons and other pieces.

"Now about the china," going back into the kitchen. "This is the every day china, and must be kept in the china closet. Don't leave it in the sink, and don't EVER put it in the ice box! This blue is the kitchenware, so if you break any you'll know what to get to replace it.

"Oh, no, Miss. I always tries to be careful. I hope I'll not break nothing."

"Well, now that's all, isn't it? You know how to clean up the kitchen, don't you? I want you to put on white aprons and go to the grocer."

"Oh, sure, Miss! I won't take me long to get me marketing up Warren."

Helen did also turn up" was the next question.

"Oh, yes, dear, she came a few min. after you left and I really think she's going to be wonderful! She's so clean, she has the front room, bedroom and hall done already and is getting the dinner. I'm sure we're going to get on splendidly. I'm so glad you like her, for she doesn't look a bit salted, does she?

"Well, then I'll keep this I get home. A woman's ring me now?" and he rang off.

Well, my little maid—

"Please, sir, I've sent him two cheap."

"Now, Nora, don't you leave the kitchen and indeed in the outside paper bags the delivery men have just left.

"Once a week you must bring out a load of crockery and one of bedding. We're very particular about having the sand sent clean. As soon as it comes, wash it thoroughly and keep it in this tub. Always place a sheet of newspaper down a little more of the bottom. Then put it right on the ice. You must wash out this cloth every few days and use it for nothing else.

"Now, the potatoes go down here. They didn't send very nice ones, did they? They're too small to bake; you'd better wash them for dinner. These tomatoes will keep until tomorrow. And I'll show you how we like these things. What's this?" feeling a small, hard package. "Oh, the liver, I forgot for the moment. You can put that in the ice box just as it is.

"Won't it smell up everything, Miss?" sniffing at the package.

"No, not if you're well wrapped. There's the bread box on there," unwrapping and handing her two loaves neatly done up by Mr. Curtis's cakes for dinner and this we use for toast in the morning.

"Now, I ordered string beans, oh, yes, here they are. We'll have them for dinner. You know how to cook them, don't you? Just serve with butter and those, don't you? And here are the same vegetables, the butcher will send a chicken for dinner tonight, also. I thought that would be easy for you the first night.

"You must wash plain vegetable soup, Miss."

"Yes, and put in two of these tomatoes. And, oh! while I think of it," taking a tiny drawer from the spice box on the wall, "these are celery seeds. Always put a few of these in the soup; they flavor it so much. That must be the head cook," and Helen opened the dumbwaiter and took off the brown paper parcel.

Nora got through the housework with ease. Plainly she knew how to clean. By 2 o'clock she had the whole apartment shining and had even washed out the bedclothes. But when she began to get dinner Helen was in the kitchen.

Although Helen set the table and fixed the salad, mixed dressing and Warren's cocktail, Nora cooked the meal herself with a manikin's skill.

He did not see Nora until she brought in the soup and then he gave her a quick, appraising glance.

"Why, you're the nice looking—I mean clean and wholesome looking!" whispered Helen as Nora went back to the kitchen.

Her looks are all right—but is this soup a sample of her cooking? Tastes rather queer, doesn't it?"

Dear, don't say anything," pleaded Helen. "This is her first dinner and I know she'll do better."

But unfortunately, the steak was over done, the mashed potatoes a little soggy and the salad a dismal failure from the point of view of the connoisseur.

"Where on earth did you ever acquaint with and engage such a woman?" demanded Warren. "Why in the devil don't you get a new girl? Any fool can get a green girl loose in the kitchen, do you, and let her get dinner?"

"Now, dearest, don't get excited. I've been nothing but show her all day long. I asked him I'm honest. I know she's industrious and willing and she's willing and quick to learn. It's just a question of breaking her in.

"Well, I'm not in the digestion ruined by any such man's as this. If you've got to have a green girl you'd better supply some one else. You've got enough to get a girl that knows clean and cook. I'm not a cook-stove and I'm not going to be one that can't!"

A BIBLICAL BARGAIN.

The professors of Kenyon and His Brothers records a newspaper correspondent of this story. The Sunday school teacher was explaining Abbie barrette, and the minister had come to examine the scholars. The teacher to ask a question that would show how well he had understood the lesson.

"Now, my great, great old Jacob himself?"

"They and their brother Joseph," answered the class in unison.

"Twenty pieces of silver."

"Correct. And what are the saddest and wickedness of these bad brothers?"

No answer.

"Why, they sold their brother even more detestable and brutal?"

Then a little fellow stretched out his eager hand.

"Well, my little man?"

"Please, sir, they sold him too cheap."

Do You Know That—

A French company has applied to the Russian Ministry of Ways and Communications for permission to give cinematograph entertainments on the Trans-Siberian trains and on other Russian trains covering journeys occupying over twenty-four hours. It is proposed that special carriages with adequate accommodation for such performances shall be attached to each train. The price of admission for the entertainments is fixed at a quarter.

The world's [illegible] records were broken recently at [illegible] (china) by six girls who ordered their breakfast by selling kisses at $1 each in aid of the endowment fund of the Salem Hospital. The "kissing bee" lasted two hours. There was a half-mile line of men, aged eighteen to sixty, waiting their turn. Some men took their kiss and went back along the line and bought it over again several by the ears and marched home by their lady kissy wives.

JEWISH LEADERS PROTEST RITUAL TRIAL

New England Aroused at Injustice; Indignation Meeting in Faneuil Hall.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 18.—The growing movement of protest against the "ritual murder" farce now in progress at Kieff, in which 13 Jewish workingmen, headed by a lad of 12 years, are on trial for their lives, on the charge of murdering a Christian boy for ritualistic purposes, is attracting the attention in the highest circles of the Russian capital to the disgraceful affair.

Every day there is an increasing number of protests from influential centers. Eight thousand workmen of the naval dock yard at Nikolaieff fired today for a one-day strike to express their abhorrence of the Kieff proceedings, and it is certainly announced that plans of the strikers.

The freedom of the press was again threatened today when the president of the court warned reporters that he might be obliged to prohibit the faking of stenographic notes.

This threat arose from a complaint about the reports written by the staff of the Kieffsky Mysel, the newspaper which already has had an issue seized owing to its comment on the methods of the court. These reports are supplied to many Russian and other European newspapers.

The president declared they misrepresented the proceedings as well as the rulings of the court, and added he had tried to regulate the situation by proposing that all copy be officially checked before publication, but if the misleading statements continued they might be forbidden altogether.

Among the points of evidence for the defence it was shown that Basil Cherbergak, husband of Vera, was at the telegraph office, as shown by the time sheets, at the time that Vera declared Eugene hurried home to tell his father that he had seen two rabbis dragging Yushinsky away.

It was also brought out that Basil had never confessed the rabbis for months afterward.

Following are the views of prominent Russians on the situation revealed by the "ritual murder" trial at Kiew.

RUSSIA EXPOSES HER EVIL PURPOSE, DECLARES DE HAAS

By JACOB DE HAAS,
Editor Jewish Advocate.

Every now and then some paid official of the Russian government goes around American cities telling wondering audiences of the virtues of Russia, the nobility of its people and the kindheartedness of the Czar. The other side of the picture is not shown to the machinations of the Jews who are nihilists, revolutionists, etc.

But now Russia has exposed her evil purposes and horrible methods, and the infamous story is being told by hundreds of journalists who have been attracted to Kieff by this revival of a savage and vile atrocity, which has been exposed over and over again.

"PRACTICES OF THE DARK AGES STILL EXIST"—GLASSER

By DR. SAMUEL GLASSER.

This unfortunate case of Beilis will serve to awaken the world to the fact that the ignorant practices and beliefs of the dark ages have not yet ceased to exist. The world, as a whole, has long recognized the absurdity of the "ritual murder" charge. Such a charge can only be brought in a country like Russia, where the abuses of freedom and justice have been fostered for centuries by a selfish, despotic government.

SAYS RITUAL MURDER CHARGE IS FOUNDED ON HOARY BIGOTRY

By Rabbi Herman H. Robenovitz,
Of the Mishkan Tefila, Moreland and Copeland streets, Roxbury.

The ritual murder accusation is a relic of the barbarism and cannot have, to us from heavy antiquity. We find that a similar charge was advanced by the Pagans against the early Christians. That there isn't the slightest foundation for this charge has been repeatedly proved.

It is a well-known fact that there is a deep-rooted aversion for blood amongst the Jewish people. The dietary laws of the Jew make it obligatory upon them to thoroughly remove and drain off all blood from the meat which they are to use as food.

The spirit of humanity and kindness, even to the dumb brute, is enjoined by the Jewish religion upon all its followers.

That Judaism would prescribe or even tolerate the murder of innocent children for the purpose of using their blood in its ritual is utterly unthinkable and too horrible to contemplate.

Boston Meetings to Protest Kiev Case

A mass meeting will be held in Faneuil Hall tomorrow afternoon in charge of the Independent Order of the Sons of Freedom to protest against Russia's course in the "ritual murder" trial at Kiev. Cardinal O'Connell, Bishop Lawrence, Rabbi Harry Levi, Governor Foss and Mayor Fitzgerald have been asked to speak.

Another protest meeting, to be followed by a monster petition containing the signatures of 175,000 Jews who live in Massachusetts, will be held tomorrow evening in Brunswick Hall, Blue Hill avenue. The Zion Association of Greater Boston will also meet to act on the "ritual murder."

Freedom of Press Is Again Threatened by President of Russian Court.

Asks Federal Action.

From all parts of the civilized world protests have been forwarded to the Russian government against this dreadful plot. To this mighty chorus of protest the United States also should lend its voice through its accredited representatives. To the Russian people and government we note its strong disapproval and its sincere sympathy in the present misfortune of modern civilization.

ASKS GOVERNMENT TO PROTEST RUSSIA'S TRYING OF BEILIS

By LOUIS TAYLOR,
Grand Master of the Independent Order of the United Hebrews of America.

In the name of our organization, which now done so much good for the uplift of our people in America, I wish to commend the liberal papers for the friendly disposition they have shown, and are showing, in placing the Jewish people to the proper light before the world, and also in arousing public attention to the recent act of Russia in introducing an issue from the medieval past, so as to poison the minds of the Christian people and act as a cloak to divert attention of a most senseless people in a despotic country.

The Jews of this country have it in their power to force Russia to cease its tyrannical treatment of their kindred, and this can be done, and ought to be done without delay by the appointed representatives in Congress taking such action as will lead to the withdrawal from this country protesting to the Czar and his government at Mendell Beilis being tried on such a charge as that preferred against him.

"WHOLE CIVILIZED WORLD IS AGHAST," DECLARES ALPERT

By ABRAHAM ALPERT,
Editor Jewish Boston American.

I am convinced that the "ritual murder" trial in Kieff, Russia, is being carried on for the purpose of arousing the Russian populace to another outburst such as occurred when thousands were massacred in Kishineff in 1904.

Should the trial against Mendell Beilis continue, there is no doubt such a protest meeting held in every city and town of this State as has seldom been seen in the State of Massachusetts.

The trial is a farce and the whole civilized world stands aghast at the spectacle of Russia, one of the great powers, relentlessly persecuting and murdering men, women and little children for no other reason than that they are Jews.

The Jewish community of Greater Boston is very grateful to the AMERICAN for presenting the exact facts and details to the public.

RABBI ISRAEL PRAYS WORLD WILL PREVENT MASSACRE OF JEWS

By RABBI PHINEAS ISRAEL,
Of the Congregation Adath Jeshurun, Blue Hill Avenue, Roxbury.

I come from a town in Russia called Elizabeth Grad, where the first Russian massacre took place in 1881, and the barbarous scenes of that awful happening will never leave my memory. I pray that such a condition of affairs will never occur again, and that the civilized world will enter such a protest against the Beilis "ritual murder" case so as to forestall the development of a feeling among Russians to wreak outrages on inoffensive Jews.

This "ritual murder" theory of the Russian government is nothing more or less than an excuse for an attack upon the Jews. The government is merely nurturing a plot against the people of my race to persecute Beilis, thereby inciting the Russian peasantry to commit another massacre. It's the twentieth century shame, and heaven cries out for interference by the civilized world before such a consummation is brought about.

The great number of Jewish people in the United States are a lawabiding, liberty-loving people, and they call upon President Wilson and the Congress of the United States to take some action in behalf of the helpless people in a despotic country.

The Jews of this country have it in their power to force Russia to cease its tyrannical treatment of their kindred, and this can be done, and ought to be done without delay by the appointed representatives in Congress taking such action as will lead to the withdrawal from this country protesting to the Czar and his government at Mendell Beilis being tried on such a charge as that preferred against him.

Y. M. C. A. OFFICIALS CONSIDER ACTION IN "RITUAL CASE"

The secretaries of the Young Men's Christian Associations of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, at their meeting in the Twentieth Century Club, decided to refer to a committee for action the suggestion of Philip Davis of the North End Civic House that action be taken in the "ritual case" in Kiev, Russia.

Mr. Davis pointed out that the convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, has adopted a resolution expressing disbelief in the alleged "blood ritual."

"In taking that step," Mr. Davis said, "the convention has done more to stop unjust accusation than any body of Jews could have accomplished."

"CHRISTIAN CHURCH SHOULD ACT," SAYS CHARLES FLEISCHER

By CHARLES FLEISCHER,
Leader, the Sunday Commons.

At the triennial general convention of the House of Deputies of the Protestant Episcopal Church a resolution was adopted calling upon the state church of Russia to make formal pronouncement that charges of so-called 'ritual murders' are without foundation or justification in the teachings and practice of the religion of Israel." And, the convention added: "We remind them that in the early days of Christianity similar charges were brought to ignorance and superstition against our own most holy religion."

This was altogether proper, and it would seem to point to the desirability and the necessity for similar action by all the religious bodies in Christendom. Just the Christian church appear to be in sympathy with the Russian church herein, and by the duplication of silence to give sanction to the continuously recurring charges of "ritual murder" made under the direct auspices of the state religion of Russia.

Jews Grateful for Hearst Aid, Declares Leader

"We American Jews are thankful that we never lived in Russia. We also are thankful there is a man in America as generous and open-minded as Mr. Hearst, who is willing to take the part of the oppressed."

TODAYS STOCK MARKET

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor.

Stocks opened higher and finished so at the last hour of the week, following a better demand for a number of market leaders. Among issues to show closing gains in Boston were Boston & Maine 3/8, New Haven 3/8, American Telephone 3/4, Alaska Gold 1/2, Calumet & Arizona 3/8, Granby 1 1/4, North Butte 1 1/4, Superior Copper 1/2, Old Dominion 1/2, Tamarack 1/2 and Pond Creek 1/2.

In New York there was evidence that accumulating of Reading and Union Pacific is in progress and there was aggressive buying of Amalgamated. Coppers were stronger as a class and there was marked improvement for many railroad issues. An idea prevailed in financial and speculative circles that the Wilson administration is being impressed by opposition to the pending currency bill and that there will not be any legislation of the kind affecting this session.

Among the stocks to close higher in New York were Southern Pacific 1/2, St. Paul 1, Steel 1 1/4, Canadian Pacific 1 1/4, Amalgamated 1 3/8, Union Pacific 1 3/4, and Reading 1 1/2.

The New York bank statement given out today, was, in brief, as follows. Average amount: Excess cash reserve, $6,536,750, increase, $2,903,750; loans, decrease, $18,091,000; specie decrease, $2,626,000; legal tenders, increase, $1,000,000; net deposits, decrease, $18,139,000; circulation, increase, $35,000. Actual statement—Loans, decrease, $24,536,000; specie, decrease, $3,083,000; legal tenders, increase, $1,133,000; net deposits, decrease, $18,372,000; reserve, increase, $4,714,100.

Billion Dollar Mortgage Rumor.

There is a rumor circulating Wall Street that the Pennsylvania road is considering putting a blanket mortgage with a bond issue provision to total $1,000,000,000 or more. This would include the mortgage records and illustrates what a tremendous business property the railroad is. There is now nearly $500,000,000 of Pennsylvania stock outstanding, although there was but $200,000,000 out as recently as 1902. The amount of stock has expanded no more than its business.

If plans should be a bond issue the proceeds of the latter would be used for retiring and future financing purposes. The company has $80,000,000 bonds maturing October 1, 1915, and $40,000,000 more in bonds about the same time. Hitherto it has been the policy of the road's directorate to do most of its financing through the issue of stock. That is why its stock amounts to more than twice as much as its bonded indebtedness. The bonded indebtedness is $266,000,000. One statement about the possible bond issue reads:

A plan to leave the amount of the issue unlimited, it is understood, is being considered, with the condition that issues of bonds under the mortgage should be restricted by vote of the stockholders annually.

Beef From Argentina.

Argentina is likely to take advantage of the new tariff to make big beef shipments to the United States, according to Dr. A. D. Melvin, chief of the government bureau of animal industry, who has just returned from that country. He said it was significant that a big steamship line operating between this country and the east coast of the southern hemisphere should install large refrigerating space for beef. Government statistics show that exportation of beef cattle has declined greatly in ten years. Exports of that kind for eight months in 1903 were valued at $14,000,000, while the total for a corresponding period this year was only $1,000,000. Imports of cattle, meantime, increased from 9,357 to 340,103 in the same period, and their value from $24,315 to $5,631,842.

Once it was the boast of Americans that this country could feed the world. Now there are anomalies like this position if it will be able much longer to feed all of its own inhabitants.

Praises Three Democrats.

Senator Borah, Republican, has praised Senators O'Gorman, Hitchcock and Reed for their refusal to accede to President Wilson's plea that caucus agreement of the pending currency bill. Mr. Bristow said:

"The three Democratic Senators who have refused to be hurried in their consideration of this great measure are patriots. The time will show that they have saved their President and their party, and saved the country from a condition that would have brought untold harm.

"Had the bill as it passed the House been rushed through this Senate as Democratic leaders insisted it would have created a business paralysis the like of which the country has never known, and would have destroyed the Democratic party."

Financial News in Brief.

President Ripley of the Santa Fe road told Postmaster-General Burleson that American railways are being underpaid $25,000,000 a year in the aggregate for carrying the mails, aside from the added burden of the parcel post transportation for which it is claimed they practically get nothing.

How the parcel post has affected the express business is reflected in the report of the American Express Co. for the year ending June 30. Its gross receipts were the largest it has ever known, but in spite of that the company operated at a deficit of $246,544, contrasted with a surplus of $693,460 in 1912. Earnings applicable for dividends were $246,544 less.

For the year ended by August the Crucible Steel Company of America reports gross earnings of $6,958,151, an increase of $1,844,173 over the great prev ious, with net profit of $4,995,886, showing a gain of $1,680,800. The surplus of the company was $3,150,886, which added to the previous surplus gave a total of $4,180,165, an increase of $1,680,800 over the surplus of August 31, 1912.

To Keep the Jews Prisoners in the Russian Pale---

That Was the First Purpose of the False "Blood Accusation."
To Encourage Massacre the Second Purpose

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company

Underlying every fresh and false charge of "ritual murder" you find a very well defined purpose. In the Middle Ages the accusation was made as an excuse for murdering Jews to get their money.

Today in Russia the old, brutal lies about religious murder are revived for political effect, to prevent any interference with the system under which the Jews—men, women and children—are kept prisoners in the pale, and to keep alive the ignorant, superstitious, bigoted hatred of the peasants—cunningly aimed against the Jews in order that they may not turn upon the government that brutalizes them.

In the Duma, which is the Russian apology for a legislative body, there has been recently an effort to abolish the pale, and give to the Jews the freedom of residence and of activity which they have so wisely and usefully exercised in this and in other countries.

The abolition of the pale, which Russia along with other brutalities still preserves, would give to the Jews freedom, opportunity and the power, among other things, to work more efficiently against tyranny.

Consequently the energies of the police and of the Czar's representatives in the Duma to fight every effort to abolish the pale.

A brief synopsis of the accusation and the motive back of it is furnished by a capable writer, "Mentor," in the London Chronicle.

We quote:

A deputy of the Duma, belonging to the "Real Russian" section, M. Maikoff, when he read an account of the tragedy, perceived that the story could be used against Jews in the campaign he was carrying on to prevent the abolition of the pale of settlement. He traveled from St. Petersburg to Kiev, and after conferring with the leaders of the reactionary party in the "Holy" City, he established a regular headquarters there for the distribution of anti-Jewish proclamations, in which he charged the Jews with having murdered the boy Yuschinsky.

The former Chief of the Kiev detectives was ordered by the Russian Department of Justice to formulate a ritual murder theory on the case. M. Minschuk, the head of the Detective Department, after investigating all the facts, declared that in his opinion Beilis did not murder the boy, and that Yuschinsky had not been murdered for ritual purposes. M. Minschuk was immediately put upon his trial, together with a number of his assistants, for "attempting to help the Jews." He was acquitted by the Supreme Court of Kiev last November, but against the acquittal the public prosecutor appealed. M. Minschuk was again tried, this time in Kharkov. He was declared to be guilty of having manufactured evidence to disprove the ritual murder theory, and he was sentenced to imprisonment for one year, his assistants being also condemned to punishment.

M. Margolind, one of those who is defending Beilis, makes the following observations in regard to the case:

"It is important to know," he says, "that a Jew was not first arrested. The 'ritual murder' theory was constructed long after that. They first cried 'Ritual Murder!' and then set about to find a Jew to fit the theory. Beilis was unfortunate enough to be the Jew who happened to live nearest to the spot where the body was found. He was an employe at a tile manufactory."

Beilis' connection with the case, according to M. Margolind, appears to have been that a woman who had a grudge against Beilis came, in July, 1911, and declared that another woman of very doubtful character had told her that she had seen a group of boys, among them Yuschinsky, playing in the courtyard of the factory. There came a Jew with a black beard, seized Yuschinsky, and carried him to the oven. The woman who was alleged to have given out this story declared that the whole of it was an absolute invention.

The Black Hundred issued a manifesto which was circulated broadcast. It contained a description of the murder which, upon reference, was found to be a very near copy of a story written by Lutostansky upward of forty years ago. He published it as an attack upon the Jews in a book called "On the Use of Blood by Jews for Ritual Purposes." This Lutostansky has been converted backward and forward numerous times. Many years after the publication of his book he withdrew his accusation, and approached some wealthy Jews, asking them to pay him for having retracted what he had said. These Jews declined to have anything to do with the man.

These facts, culled, as has been said, haphazard, from an article descriptive of the case, require no comment. They are sufficient to indicate the sort of foundation on which the Beilis case rests.

In the Middle Ages, as we have already pointed out, a number of rulers denounced the avarice, brutality and cruelty which always underlay this false and cowardly charge against the Jews.

More than one of the Popes, moved by a humane impulse, has protested with the full authority of the Church against the same cowardly crime.

We publish here a bull issued by Pope Innocent IV. translated by Herman L. Strack, Regius Professor of Berlin University.

With great difficulty we can conceive of the horrible condition of cruelty and cowardice which Pope Innocent denounces and forbids in his bull sent to the Archbishop of Vienna in 1247—almost seven hundred years ago. We cannot conceive of such atrocities duplicated in this century—EXCEPT IN RUSSIA.

This is the bull which Pope Innocent IV. scattered broadcast, desiring to protect the Jews from the brutality of his day.

Read it. It is of itself an education and a revelation as to dreadful human brutality, masquerading in the name of Christianity, and torturing Jews for profit.

Pope Innocent said:

"If the Christian religion were carefully to weigh how inhuman and contrary to piety it is to torment with divers oppressions, and exasperate with manifold grave injuries, the survivors of the Jews, to whom, as the remaining witnesses of His redemptory suffering and His victorious death, the goodness of the Saviour has promised the grace of salvation, then would it not only keep its hands from doing them injustice, but would also at least for the sake of the semblance of piety, and out of reverence for Christ, impart the consolation of humanity to those who to a certain extent pay tribute to it. Now a petition of the Jews of Vienna to us states that the nobleman Dracunetus, after the Jews of Valreas had been accused of having crucified a girl who was found dead in a ditch, despoiled three Jews without their having been convicted or having confessed, nay, without anyone having accused them, of all their property, and consigned them to terrible imprisonment, refused them legal redress and justification of their innocence, had some of them cut to pieces, others burnt. The genital organs were torn off the men, and the breasts off the women, and they were tortured with all manner of tortures until they admitted with their mouths what their conscience knew nothing about, because they preferred to die once in agony than to live and be continually tortured.

"In order to increase the agonies of the tortured, the Bishop of Trois-Chateaux and some magnates of the province had seized this opportunity to rob all the Jews dwelling in their districts of their possessions, and to imprison and torture those whom the Apostolic See has taken under its protection, by various forcible methods and oppressions. They have therefore humbly entreated us mercifully to be solicitous for their innocence. As, therefore, when there has been no antecedent crime, no one shall suffer punishment, and also no one may be punished for another's crime, we, filled with fatherly sympathy for them, command you, if things are so, to cause the Bishop and the others to restore to the aforesaid Jews their freedom and belongings, to give them compensation, and to allow them to live unhampered."

Thus brutality was rebuked by the Pope seven centuries ago in Europe. Will not the people of this country find words, courage, power and influence to rebuke effectively that same brutality in Russia today?

That Ton of Coal

GIMME A TON OF COAL
AW! ANOTHER ONE TON GUY
WHEN YOU BUY IT
WHERE'LL I PUT IT?
WHEN IT'S DELIVERED
YOU POOR SIMP THAT AIN'T MORE'N HALF A TON
WHEN YOU LOOK AT IT
WHEN YOUR NEIGHBOR LOOKS AT IT
WHEN YOU SHOVEL IT
WHEN IT'S GONE.

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

Chapter XXXIX.

In spite of the remarks of Mrs. Fletcher senior, to the effect that she and Mary must discuss Bert's silence and absence, it was not until the day after the baby's return from the hospital that the grandmother again introduced the subject. Then it was to suggest that Mary call up the firm for which Bert was working and ask how soon he was expected home. Mary hesitated. She did not like, she admitted, to seem to spy upon her husband's actions.

"But you need not tell who you are," said her mother-in-law. "Just say that you are a friend and want to know when he'll be in town again. They may think you're some lady wantin' to ask him to an afternoon tea," she added grimly, trying to smile at her own effort at a joke.

But Mary did not smile. To her the whole situation was humiliating. The older woman looked at her sympathetically.

"I know all this is hard for you, my girl," she acknowledged. "But you'll soon know that it ain't any harder than something I've been doin'. And when you know all I've been doin' you'll see why I ain't able to do no more'n I have for you an' baby. The little money I have is goin' fast. If I lose every cent, it'll be my son's fault."

Mary took the speaker's hand in hers with an impulse of pity. She felt that the mother's suffering was far greater than was hers, for the mother loved her son in spite of all his sins, while the wife felt a positive revulsion at the thought of him.

"Don't speak of your not being able to do more for baby and me," she protested. "You do more already than you should. How could we get along without you?—and yet here I am not your own blood, but only a daughter-in-law."

"Yes, but you're many times better to me than my own child is, and if it hadn't been for him you'd not be in the straits you're in now. But talkin' over matters don't help just now. You go out and telephone."

Mary did not return for nearly two hours. She had not adopted her mother-in-law's suggestion. She disliked double-dealing of all kinds and instead of telephoning had gone right down to Bert's supposed place of business. Here she saw the president of the company and asked him bluntly, though with averted eyes, if he could tell her when her husband would be back in New York.

"My mail from him may have gone astray," she said, "or he may be ill. I want to communicate with him if possible, but if he is coming home soon I will wait."

The silence which followed this remark caused her to look up in surprise. The president's perplexed eyes were fixed upon her.

"Mrs. Fletcher," he said, flushing embarrassedly, "I'm a man who believes in going straight to the point, so I feel it my duty to tell you that your husband left our employ almost a year ago. I know nothing, therefore, of his whereabouts."

Mary started to her feet. "Left your employ!" she exclaimed. "I did not know he had given up this business!"

A half-smile twisted the man's lips. "Well," he said reluctantly, "again I must speak the truth and say that he hardly gave the business up, so much as if gave him up."

"But," faltered Mary, "how could that be? He had put so much money into the concern! Surely then he still has an interest in it!"

The expression of consternation on the face of her companion checked her. She stepped forward suddenly, and, unconsciously, laid her hand on his arm.

"Please, please," she begged, "tell me all the truth! Didn't my husband put money into this business?"

The president looked her straight in the eyes. "I will tell you the truth," he said, "although I hate to do it. Your husband was only an employe of this concern, he never put a cent into it, and he was discharged"—he hesitated—"on account of drunkenness. I'm sorry to have to tell you this Mrs. Fletcher, but you asked for facts."

"Thank you," murmured the wife. Unsteadily she walked toward the office door which the president opened for her. He watched her cross the corridor and signal the elevator, nor did he return to his office until the car and its burden had dropped from his sight. Then he shook his head.

"Infernal cur!" he muttered. "That is the kind of man who often gets a brave wife. But how a woman like that ever married that scoundrel is another of life's many mysteries."

Mary Fletcher walked toward the elevated road unconscious of the cold wind that was wrapping her skirts about her ankles and chilling her to the bone. It brought no color to her face, and people who passed her wondered if she were ill. Wearily she climbed the steps of the elevated road, bought her ticket—with her mother-in-law's money, she reflected—and passed out to the platform to await the uptown train. As it thundered into the station she stepped aside to allow the outcoming passengers to alight. A low exclamation from a man who had almost passed her caused her to look up with a start. In front of her stood Gordon Craig, a little heavier, a little grayer than of old, but with a look in his eyes that made the woman catch her breath.

"You?" she whispered—"YOU?"

Then suddenly she was conscious of her shabby clothing, of how old and worn she must look, and she tried to hurry on. But Craig's hand was stretched out and she could not ignore it. She laid her trembling hand hastily into his, but she did not return the grasp of his strong fingers.

"Where are you going?" he asked quickly. "Are you staying in town?"

"Yes," she began—"I am"—she checked herself. This man must not know where she was.

"All aboard!" shouted the guard impatiently.

She drew her hand away, hurried on the train, and the gate slammed shut sharply behind her.

The Health of Great Cities

By REV. C. F. AKED, D. D.

Ex-President Eliot of Harvard is correctly reported, he must have been in a more than usually despondent vein when he opened the International Congress of Social Hygiene at Buffalo. It may be that the reporters misunderstood him; but they represent him as sounding a note of warning over the deadly and destructive life which we all live in the big cities. According to the reports, Dr. Eliot said that:

"Such cities as Paris, London, Berlin, New York and Chicago bear witness to the fact that modern civilization is all the time preparing and promoting its own destruction."

Precisely the contrary is true. We are adding to the healthfulness of great cities every year. We are successfully battling with almost every one of the more dangerous diseases. And each successive generation sees an enormous span added on to the average duration of human life.

Opposed by Facts

In the latest edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica an Englishman of science, in an article upon "Longevity," speaks with great positiveness and in a sense diametrically opposed to Dr. Eliot. He says:

"There seems to be almost no doubt but that the average duration of life has increased with civilization; the generally improved conditions of life, the greater care of the young and of the aged, and the advance in medical and surgical science far more than outweigh any depressing effect caused by the more strenuous and nervous activity required by modern social organization. The expectation of life of those who attain the age of sixty varies with race, sex and occupation, but is certainly increasing, and an increasing number of persons have a chance of reaching and do reach ages between ninety and a hundred."

The decline of the death rate in practically every civilized country on the globe during the last fifty years is one of the outstanding facts of experience. It varies from 15 per cent. in Russia to 28 per cent. in England and 33 per cent. in Holland. The "expectation of life" has, to be sure, proportionately increased, so that at birth the human being has an "expectation" of forty-five years of life—and that is more than at any period of the world's history which has preserved statistics. The "expectation of life" agreed upon by the great life insurance companies of this country is necessarily worked out on a lower scale—else there would be no profits. Yet according to this scale a person of forty may "expect" to live to be sixty-eight! The records of the eighteenth century or of the seventeenth century, so far as there are any, can show nothing like this.

Epidemics Now Rare

One has only to recall one's own youth. In my native city of Nottingham, England, there was a cemetery known by the name of "The cholera burying ground." The name tells the story—epidemics of cholera from time to time sweeping the city, so that fresh "burying grounds" had to be opened for the reception of the dead. And this was a common experience of English cities in the middle of the nineteenth century. How many American cities in our time are swept by such a scourge?

The person who has passed middle life can remember that as a child he used to see any number of men and women with faces so deeply dented by smallpox as to be positively repulsive. This was a common sight. It was not a rare and isolated phenomenon. But nobody sees that sort of thing today.

As for tuberculosis—that terrible plague!—while its path is still marked by the shattered wrecks of our frail mortality and watered by the tears of millions, we are winning in the fight against it all over the earth. In Prussia the death rate from tuberculosis has fallen 40 per cent. in twenty years. In England it has fallen 54 per cent. in fifty years. In the United States the death rate was reduced 20 per cent. in ten years! And everybody knows that the disease where it exists and where it kills its victims is less virulent. It takes longer to kill a person than it used to, and it kills him in a less hideous way.

A Winning Fight

We are winning here as elsewhere in the fight for healthier conditions and larger life! We are working on right lines—and we have only to work harder, keep on at it, and accelerate the rate of progress. We ought not to grudge appropriations of large sums of public money. It is good economy to spend freely in saving men and women.

One thing that makes city life healthy is—it is so interesting! If I spent as much energy in sawing wood as I do in catching trout I should faint dead away within an hour. And everybody knows that this law holds good for himself. It is interest that keeps us going. The city is full of things that interest us, and so is full of things to keep us alive. The author of "The Soul of London" represents a city physician as saying:

"Did you ever have to do with a sick farm-laborer? These fellows! Why, they fold their hands and die for a touch of liver. Their life doesn't hold them because it contains no interest. Why, I'd rather attend fifty London street rats with half a lung apiece than one great hulking farm bailiff. Those are the fellows, after all, for getting over an illness."

And he is right. The seething, rushing, whirling, swirling life of great cities—let us accept it and delight in it and be thankful for it and proud of it! And let us see to it, as far as in us lies, that we add to its healthy human interest, very sure that as we do so we are adding to its human health! Good shows, good theatres, good amusements of every kind, good newspapers, and I do not know why I should not add good sermons, make for health and long life.

Governor Foss Struck the Right Note in His Speech Demanding Prison Reform

Governor Foss made a speech at Indianapolis which ought to attract the attention and meet the approval of the people of Massachusetts.

The Governor says that more than ONE-THIRD of all the people sent to jail in this Commonwealth were sent there because they were TOO POOR to pay a fine. These men suffered, in most cases, for offenses against the law which had "no serious moral quality."

They did not "indicate defects of character in the offender." They were only "acts which the Legislature has prohibited arbitrarily, in the general interest of the public, and most of them are punishable with money penalties."

The Governor continues:

> The 10,000 who were locked up for debt were, in many instances, the victims, not of justice, but of the inequality of our justice.

The Governor condemns this system. So does the AMERICAN. It has always supported the Governor in his wise and humane efforts to make more just the operation of our corrective laws. Much of the Governor's efforts in this direction have borne fruit. They will bear more fruit as time goes on.
